But the tobacco trust already had its representatives in Cuba engaged in trying to buy up all the land suited to the cultivation of the world-famed Habana tobacco—the celebrated Vuelta Abajo—the finest variety of the weed known to man.

The trust was busily absorbed in its work, and while it succeeded in getting a good deal of land it never obtained control of the tobacco output of Cuba. There were men in the trust, however, who deluded themselves with the idea that they were going to be able to monopolize the growing of fine tobacco in the island of Cuba. While this dream was upon them some one asked: "How about the Isle of Pines tobacco?"

This was followed by whispers in the ear of the trust magnates that there were large tracts of land in the Isle of Pines upon which tobacco as fine as any produced in the Vuelta Abajo district could easily be grown.

This caused some of the trust men to promptly tender their resignations from the Don't Worry Club. They feared that their carefully planned schemes were about to miscarry, and that their efforts to secure control of the production of Habana tobacco, on which they had been engaged for years, and which it had up to then seemed to them were about to succeed, were doomed to failure if the Isle of Pines should be declared American territory. It was perfectly clear the tobacco grown on the Isle of Pines would have no duty to pay on being brought to the United States, while the Cuban tobacco would of course be subject to the usual tariff charges of $4.50 a pound and 25 per cent ad valorem for wrapper leaf and 35 cents a pound for filler. The trust seems to have accepted at their face value the claims that the tobacco grown on the Isle of Pines would be in every way equal to that produced in the Vuelta Abajo district.

Just what steps the trust took to protect itself against the Isle of Pines tobacco of course may not be said with certainty, but it has been asserted frequently, and is being asserted to-day, that it is due to the influence of representatives of the trust and the powerful lobby which it constantly maintains in Washington that the Administration decided to haul down the flag on the Isle of Pines.

It is not believed, of course, that President Roosevelt had the slightest suspicion that the trust was in any way interested until the Administration had been definitely committed to the purpose of relinquishing the Isle of Pines.

The American colony on the Isle of Pines is in the meantime suffering greatly because of the relinquishment of the island by the United States Government. Its members declare that conditions on the island under Cuban administration are unbearable. Latin-Americans have not the faculty for governing Anglo-Saxons, and Anglo-Saxons have not the faculty of submission to Latin-American rule.

The President and the Secretary of State are said to be firmly fixed in their determination to give the island to Cuba. But there are Senators who are bitterly opposed to transferring the Isle of Pines to Cuba, after it was made ours by solemn treaty with Spain, and after many Americans had been induced by our Government to go there and invest capital in the development of the wonderful resources of the island.

The Isle of Pines is about 30 by 40 miles in extent and contains the finest harbor in the Spanish Main. If the Americans have to leave, as they will if the treaty is ratified, it will be a long time before the development of the resources of the island is undertaken with any degree of energy.

If the Isle of Pines is finally given over to Cuba, President Roosevelt will have the unenvied distinction of being the first President of the United States who ever ceded American territory to a foreign nation, either at the behest of a trust, or for any other reason.

My correspondent continues:

I hope I shall not weary you in adding some bits of information to the details given in my late letter.

The Cuban rule is complained of as nagging and irritating rather than openly oppressive. As administered at present, it is, as I have said before, under restraint. The Cubans have a jealous dislike for Americans, and, once secure in power, it is believed they would be oppressive in many ways. Let me cite some instances of petty tyrannies now prevailing:

No Protestant clergyman is permitted to perform a marriage ceremony; restrictions are imposed as to social gatherings; secret organizations, especially Masonry, are positively forbidden; and in cases of illness a Cuban doctor must be summoned, if not as sole physician, at least as a consulting one. I think Americans quietly disregard this last law, but should anyone die under the care of an unaided American doctor the bereaved family would be punished by an offended government. The mortuary laws are especially unbearable. It is scarcely safe for an American to die. Public autopsies must be held, and it is only when necessity pushes aside the law that Protestant dead can be buried.

I will stop here to remark upon that statement that I will produce evidence to the Senate that when an American has died a natural death in Cuba the rural guarde, the authorities, come and drag him out of his house and carry him to the market place and cut him up like a dead hog to see whether he died a natural death.

Fortunately, thus far, the Americans have been practically immortal. I think there have been but three deaths since the American occupation of the island, and two of these were the result of accidents.

Just now American indignation is running high over Cuban injustice in a transportation matter. The steamship Campbell, an American vessel plying between Batabano and the ports of the Isle of Pines, becoming infirm, a new boat was last year decided upon. An order was sent to New York, and the boat is now ready for service. In it the citizens of the Isle of Pines invested $50,000. And now the Cuban Government declares that it must be transferred to Cuban ownership before it can go into service. As I understand, the new steamship is lying idle on the Cuban coast. Is not this an outrage? For the travel between the islands—Cuba and the Isle of Pines—there would be today only sailing vessels had it not been for American money and resolution. And now, after having had the expense and trouble of equipping a modern steamship, the Americans are asked to deliver it to Cuban ownership and management. It would seem that the Habana government had grown sure of holding the island and was now beginning to show its real policy as to rule.

I spoke of the judge at Nueva Gerona as conciliatory in his treatment of Americans. It remains to add that this gentleman has lately been transferred to Cuba and an uncompromising and otherwise undesirable official sent over in his stead. Judge Diego was probably deemed too lenient in his methods for an Isle of Pines position.

I spoke of a sponge industry within the island's maritime limits. Americans who have looked into this matter assert—and claim to be conservative in their estimate—that if the United States were willing to pay Cuba $10,000,000 for the Isle of Pines, as a peace offering, the sponge industry alone would return the investment in less than twenty years.

That is not imagination; that is a fact.

Owing mainly to the mild northern winter the Isle of Pines has this season had a smaller tourist invasion than during previous winters, but I am told that more land has been bought, and more improvements have been made, than in all the previous winters combined. There are a number of large fruit plantations, but much of the improvement goes on in small tracts. Those who have not the means to buy plantations or farms are buying lots and developing them. The old Spanish village of Santa Fe—now the American center—is raying out into a regular system of American streets and parks. One of the parks is to inclose and protect a magnificent Spanish laurel—a tree whose branches have a diameter of more than 100 feet. A fine mango grove on a knoll is sacredly held against any price for a second park. A new and handsome bath house is also projected. Town fathers and general citizens are working together, and, despite the political tangle in which the island is involved and the trade and travel interruptions caused by quarantine measures at Habana, they seem, from all accounts, enthusiastic in what they are doing. Building, clearing, planting, and planning are everywhere going on. The belief reigns that the home land can not and will not consign the owners of four-fifths of the island and authors of all its development to the domination of a race which, with a few individual or family exceptions, has primitive ideas in its head and colored blood in its veins.

I hope I have not presumed upon your patience in adding to my letter of yesterday. Should you wish further information I shall be glad to give it either in person or by pen. I am far from all sources of fresh supply, but after some correspondence, I may have some points of importance to submit. Meantime, of this I am sure—the Americans of the Isle of Pines are anxious for the investigation you propose. It is all they just now ask, and justice demands that it be granted.

I am, very truly,

(Miss) GERTRUDE E. WALL,
1406 L street NW.

The third letter from that lady, which I will read, is as follows:

1406 L STREET NW.,
April 7, 1906.

DEAR SENATOR MORGAN: The morning post has brought me a resolution, which I herewith promptly transmit to you. Surely the senior Senator from Illinois does not well serve, in the matter of the Isle of Pines, the wishes of the legislative body to which he is much indebted. The document comes from the secretary of state at Springfield. Please use it to the best possible advantage.

The resolution of instructions which I have here, reads as follows:

Resolution adopted by the senate of the State of Illinois May 5, 1903, and concurred in by the house May 7, 1903, that the Isle of Pines be permanently retained as territory of the United States.

ISLE OF PINES.

Whereas more than 300 American citizens now residents of the Isle of Pines, said American citizens owning more than one-half of the total territory of said island, have memorialized Congress for relief from the present government of the said Isle of Pines and are praying that the island be retained by the Government as a part of the territory of the United States; and

Whereas the United States Government continued the present government of the said Isle of Pines as a de facto government to formulate a new and better government for the island until the island of Cuba was turned over to the Cuban Government; and

Whereas the Isle of Pines was ceded to the United States Government by Spain and the Platt amendment omitted the said Isle of Pines from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, and the Secretary of War for the United States has placed the Isle of Pines within the constitutional boundaries of Cuba contrary to the wishes of the Americans there resident; and

Whereas the said 300 American citizens are colonists from the United States who have built permanent homes and made other improvements on said Isle of Pines in the reasonable belief that it was to continue to be territory of the United States, and such American citizens are entitled to the protection of the United States Government and desire to live under the flag of this country: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the forty-third general assembly (the house concurring herein), That it is the sense of the general assembly of the State of Illinois that the said Isle of Pines be permanently retained as territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house be, and they are hereby, instructed to forward to the United States Senators and Congressmen from Illinois a copy of these resolutions.

Adopted by the senate May 5, 1903.
Concurred in by the house May 7, 1903.

The letter continues:

The three years that have passed since its date only add to its force, as, in that time, American area and population have greatly increased.

I send also some notes which may add clearness to those in your possession. A brother, now in Chicago, lately come from a winter's stay on the Isle of Pines, has this week furnished me with the material for these notes. From my brother who lives on the isle I have not yet had time to hear in reply to inquiries as to the latest phase of conditions there.

After consideration, I have decided to remove any restriction whatever as to the use of my name in connection with the information lodged with you. I am sure you will not give it any unnecessary use; so I say, hold back nothing that promises to help a good cause. Give my name when the authorship of any statement I have made is demanded. I am not in the least afraid of truth. I mean especially to recall my request for reticence as to the sender of the clipping from Tobacco, should any need arise for giving the sender's name. It will be sufficient to say, I imagine, that the clipping was a part of a miscellany collected in making a general study of the island. In sending it to you for use, my feeling was that if it was false, its falsehood could be proved, and that if it was true, its truth should be made to serve the right. I am not given to speaking evil of dignitaries, but I must add that in announcing, as he did last summer, a Cuban ownership for the Isle of Pines, I merely voice the opinion of many in saying that the Secretary of State was guilty of a great discourtesy to the Senate as the sole treaty-ratifying power.

I wish some way might be found to satisfy Cuba's claims—built up by delay and nonacqaintance with real conditions on the part of the United States. She has cared nothing for the little island until recently—until Americans had developed it. The tone in Habana, I observed last spring, was one of more or less open contempt for the island either as a resort or a residence, but Habana has now had time to change her mind, and she has been encouraged to make claims. And so I say, I wish there could be some way found to pacify her without doing a cruel injustice to an Americanized island. Let, at least, the decision be delayed until the island can be visited and the situation fully understood by the deciding body. This is what every American on the island is hoping for to-day.

I am, Senator MORGAN, very truly, GERTRUDE E. WALL.

The notes that accompany the letter I will not stop to read, but I ask to have them inserted as a part of her letter. They are very highly instructive.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Isle of Pines (Isla de Pinos), discovered by Columbus in 1493 and named by him "Isla de Evangelista." Area, 1,240 square miles, or 800,000 acres.

The northern part, 600,000 acres, is owned principally by Americans. It is a natural fruit orchard and a vegetable garden. The southern part, the Cienaga, or marsh land, is rich in rare woods, as mahogany and many other varieties, admitting of high polish. Its wealth has scarcely been touched.

Seasons: Dry season, November to April (season for vegetables and tobacco); wet season, May to October (fruits, cane, corn grow and ripen throughout the year).

CONCERNING THE ISLE OF PINES.

Cuba has in her statute book a large number of laws, inherited from Spanish days, which correspond in a general way to the old blue laws of New England. As the enforcing of these petty laws is left optional with local officials, it can easily be seen how intolerable life may be made for Americans by jealous and hostile officials. These laws relate to small things, but it is the small things that count in the sum total of daily living. At present—under Cuban half-government—the force of these regulations is heavy upon the island. All public meetings of every character and every public enterprise must secure in advance a permit from the Cuban Government. Not even a private school can be opened until Habana has agreed to it.

As the natives have sold their lands they have, with few exceptions, removed to Cuba; and thus the native population is now much smaller than at the beginning of the American occupation of the island.

Recently in view of the clashing statements made in newspapers as to the number of the natives and the number of the American settlers the island really contained, an honest census was attempted. The work was promptly stopped by Cuban officials and the canvassers arrested. The inquiries were informal, no authority was asserted, and no other object was in view than to reach the truth in a disputed matter.

Until lately Cuba regarded the Isle of Pines as American territory, and so the American steamer, the J. J. Campbell, was entered and cleared at Batabano for trade with the island as a foreign vessel bent on foreign commerce. Of late, becoming sure that the island was to be declared her property, she has begun to assert a point of marine law for home coast trade, viz, Cuban ownership for all craft so engaged. In consequence the new steamer upon which the citizens of the Isle of Pines have expended some $50,000 and a great many hopes lies tied up somewhere under Cuban guard. The J. J. Campbell is now confronted by the same maritime requirement as to home commerce, though, as yet, it is allowed to struggle along with its biweekly trips.

While representing the United States Government at Habana, General Wood repeatedly declared, in answer to delegations of prospective investors sent to him to inquire as to the future of the Isle of Pines, that the island would remain in American possession; and, at a banquet given him in Habana a few weeks before the end of the American protectorate, he publicly announced his intention of setting up an American de facto government upon the island.

The seaport called Jucaro has no other buildings than those needed to lade and unlade merchandise, and these are relics of a shiftless past. Looking forward to a great sponge industry, which, under modern management they believe would soon rival that of Batabano with its $1,000,000 or more of yearly yield, the Americans have "planted" a town at this port, and plan its early development.

An American company has established a schooner line between Nueva Gerona and Mobile. This line is now one year old.

The young orchards of the island are now beginning to bear for export, and large shipments of fruit are projected. The seizure of the new steamer threatens serious loss to shippers, as the Campbell, owing to long and unrelieved travel in tropical waters, is slow and uncertain in its movements. The schooner line will be of great service—if not presently confiscated—but a direct trade with New York is the thing chiefly desired.

Mr. MORGAN. The next letter, from the same authoress, which I will read is as follows:

Dear Senator MORGAN: A letter just received from the Isle of Pines gives me some present-day items, which I herewith submit to you.

Let me remind you, of what you must know, that things governmental are in such a shifting state on the island that what is absolutely true one day may not be entirely so the next. This will explain any modifications as to previous statements you may find in this communication or in any other I may make.

After writing to you my personal observations made on the Isle of Pines one year ago, I wrote to my brother, who lives at Santa Fe, asking for additional news or for any changes of rule that might be taking place. I inclose an extract from his reply. He tells me, moreover, that within the last month—and for the first time on the island—the Protestant marriage ceremony has been celebrated. This came about through a special permit from the Cuban Government. As to Masonry, he says it is still forbidden, but as lodges flourish in Habana, a permit may, in time, be granted for organizations on the isle.

He also announces the arrival of a new island judge, the third of the line, from whom a good administration is expected. He thinks the transfer of Judge Diego, the friend of the Americans, was a recognition of his legal worth, not a rebuke for a lenient course at Neuva Gerona. He was sent, it seems, to Mantanzas, a city of 35,000 inhabitants, where, naturally, his salary would be increased as a result of the transfer.

My brother chronicles the recent death of the Cuban postmaster at Santa Fe, a Doctor Lancis, who, as I wrote some days ago, was universally complained of by the Americans under his reign, and adds: "The office has passed into the hands of a young Cuban girl, who probably will do the best she can, but we shall be pleasantly disappointed if the mails are not very badly handled for a long time to come."

I have not yet learned just how and when the calsadas—

Those are the public roads—were constructed, but of this I am assured by those who have good reasons for knowing the truth of the statement—they are kept from falling into ruin by American money (self-levied) and volunteer work. I had been led to infer that they had been built under American military rule, but I am now told that an intelligent Cuban living on the island declares that the work was done under English contract and was paid for by port revenues. The history of the island is such a blank from pirate days down to four or five years ago it is difficult to find the truth as to any occurrence antedating, even by a little time, the coming of the American settlers.

In concluding, I wish to say that your resolution relating to a personal investigation of the Isle of Pines and its conditions seems to offer the only fair way of arriving at a settlement of the vexed question. As I was about to leave the island a year ago, I heard the approaching visit of a United States Senator announced with certainty and no little hope. He had promised to come, he might arrive on the next steamer, and he might bring another Senator with him. This visit was eagerly looked for as a means of reaching Washington with the actual conditions as to American development and Cuban rule; but no Senator appeared. And, if I mistake not, up to this day not a single member of the United States Senate has set foot upon the island. Is it possible that this legislative body, devoted to careful deliberation, is going to decide an important question on outside testimony only?

I hope, Senator MORGAN, your resolution may be adopted and so allow opportunities for an impartial investigation before voting upon the fate of the island. After that I have nothing to urge. I wish a just decision, however it may result.

My brother is, as you may note, as anxious as I am to give facts only in the pro-American cause. I am,

Most truly,

GERTRUDE E. WALL.

APRIL 16, 1906.

Mr. President, I have brought forward the letter addressed to me by Mr. Pearcy and these letters addressed to me by this lady whom I have never had the honor of seeing and do not know personally, for the purpose of showing that the spirit of the people there is not an unjust spirit; that the temper in which they look at things is not distorted by covetousness or by any other feeling than that of seeing absolute justice done to the people of the United States.

I have here, sir, a bundle of letters that I will not think of reading to the Senate at this time. It may become necessary to read them at a future time. But I have also statements of various cases that have occurred in the Isle of Pines, to which I wish to make some reference before I close what I have to say in this discussion.

There is a point of time and there is a concurrence of circumstances about this business that trouble, that puzzle me. In the letter which I have had read at the desk to-day and in other papers which I have that prove it beyond question, it is stated that a very intelligent, able committee of gentlemen, men of worth, merit, in every respect, finding that the Government of the United States was going to yield its military control of Cuba, and give to it the functions of government, went over to Habana to interview Gen. Leonard Wood to see what disposition would be made of the Isle of Pines.

They conceived that the Isle of Pines had been conveyed directly to the Government of the United States by the treaty of Paris; that there was no question of geography in it at all; that it was a question merely of being an island, Cuba being named and no other island being named, except Porto Rico. In the whole vast sweep of territory that we acquired under the Paris treaty, those are the only two islands named, one—Porto Rico—ceded to us absolutely, and the other ceded to the United States as, I might say, in a sort of political trust, that they would hold the island and govern it by act of Congress, fixing the rights of the citizens of Cuba by act of Congress of the United States, and that when they came to abandon the governmental control on the part of the United States they would in that instance and for the very first time create a people in Cuba known as a people within the definition of international law, a people assembled together and organized for purposes of government under lawful authority.

Up to the time of the passage of the Platt amendment and the conformity of the Cuban Government to that amendment in its constitution and in other respects, there had been no such people as the people of Cuba. We may speak of any islanders as the people of a certain island. We may speak of the Hawaiian islanders to-day as the people of the Hawaiian Islands, not in the sense of the government, but in the sense merely of characterizing the population. In that sense Cuba had a place in the world. She had even more than that. She had to a limited degree and for a very short time the powers of municipality in her different departments, with the right of representation in the Cortes at Madrid, in Spain; and those representatives were chosen by elections, and certain people were entitled to vote for them. But as "the people of Cuba," entitled to have or receive any powers whatsoever, they did not exist in that character at all, and could not exist until the Platt amendment had made it possible by an act of the Congress of the United States.

Prior to the passage of that act, and certainly prior to the ratification of the treaty of Paris, all the people in Cuba were subjects of Spain, and the United States never contradicted it. The United States refused to recognize the independence of these people. It refused even to concede to them belligerent rights during the civil war or in our war with Spain. I was here, along with other Senators, trying to get for them the acknowledgment of the rights of belligerency while the war was going on. The Senate voted it down whenever it was presented. They were not recognized as anything else except as being subjects of Spain, some of them, alleged to be in a large minority, in a state of insurrection.

So these people in the island of Cuba, or these people of the island of Cuba, had no sort of governmental recognition until the Platt amendment was passed. They got their governmental organization and recognition or power to organize exclusively and entirely from the Platt legislation.

In the very act of creating them a people we circumscribed their limits. In what way? In the most pronounced way that was possible. In a constitutional ordinance which required them to put into their constitution a solemn declaration whereby the Isle of Pines was expressly excepted and excluded from the island of Cuba. That was our requirement. That was the condition upon which they were elevated to that state where they could become a people and exercise the powers of government. They adopted it. It is the law yet, the constitutional law of Cuba. The Isle of Pines is fenced out from that island, segregated, and separated, geographically and in every possible sense.

When that was done, Mr. President, where did this island go? Somebody owned the Isle of Pines. Who was it? It was not Cuba, because she had declared in her constitution that she did not own it and had no jurisdiction over it. Then it either reverted to Spain or it passed to the United States under the treaty of Paris, as other islands in the West Indies. There is a fact, not a problem, that does not admit of doubt or disputation. A schoolboy would have a ferrule put heavily in the middle of his hand who should stand up and say that he could not understand it. It is the plainest proposition in the world.

Now, I could rest the case right upon that proposition. The first proposition I rest it upon is the terms of the treaty before the Senate, which asserts title in the United States. The second proposition is the constitution of Cuba, which we imposed upon them under the Platt amendment, and expressly excluded the Isle of Pines from the constitutional boundaries of Cuba. How did that ever happen? Cuba or some Cubans, some Spaniards in Cuba, who were never any more reconciled to us than the devil is to holy water, and are not to-day, insisted that the island of Cuba embraced everything around there and that all come to them, and they were making their insistence in such shape as indicated that the first thing we might know these fellows would head a new rebellion and require us to go down and shoot some of them before we got their consent to keep the peace, while accepting the boon of independence, which they never wanted.

What, then, was the law? What was done? That wise man from Connecticut, Senator Platt, who had the management of this matter, wrote into his amendment, "You must declare in your constitution that the Isle of Pines does not belong to Cuba." And so they wrote it. And what are we doing now except that we are trying to repeal that declaration by intendment, by some trick of logic, or some other sort of a trick that has perhaps less logic in it than almost anything else you could mention. What we are here to-day trying to do is to get around the declaration we imposed upon Cuba. In the very moment of her birth, when she first acquired the possibility of owning and possessing any right of government at all, she was loaded down with the constitutional restriction, "You shall have no right of government in the Isle of Pines. It is none of your business where it goes to. We have not asked you where it goes to, or to make any provision that the United States should have it. That has been provided for in the treaty of Paris, under which we got the right to hold you, and let you go as soon as we chose to open the cage and let the bird take wing."

There is the situation. Mr. President, it is too plain, too obvious, too imperative for this generation of men to excuse the Senate of the United States in passing it over as idle talk, as a mere suggestion. To coming generations our reputations will go down smirched with some odious imputation connected with this business if we undertake now through a false sentiment of altrusm, or sympathy, or prejudice, or passion, or some previous pledge, hid away from the observation of the people, or the expression of some opinion on the part of some distinguished Senator, to throw away a valuable island in the Caribbean Sea, where our people have gone to the number of 2,000 and have spent their money and their time, not only under the interpretation of the United States in regard to the meaning of the Cuban constitution and of the Paris treaty, but they have gone there under an invitation of the Government.

I hold in my hand, and I have had printed as a document, for the use of the Senate, a pamphlet put out by the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the United States Government in 1902. It is the finest prospectus I have ever yet seen published by a party that desired to have his lands occupied by settlers. This matter, issued from the Bureau of Insular Affairs in 1902, was circulated by the hundreds of thousands amongst the people of the United States, and no man who reads it can find a hint or an intimation in it that the United States is not the owner of that island. Why was the United States advertising this property in this full, complete, and scientific way unless it was to inform the people of the United States that there was a place where they were welcome to go that had been provided by the benevolent foresight of that great Administration of Mr. McKinley? That was President McKinley's proposition. That was his work. That was his decision. Orville H. Platt agreed with him—I have his letter here to show it.

The people of the United States went there under Mr. McKinley's proposition and invitation. That policy changed in an hour. It changed when Gen. Leonard Wood concluded he had some power as a military commander to fasten the type of a de facto government upon an island where the United States had supreme jurisdiction; that he had power to drive out the supreme jurisdiction of the true, lawful government and by his ipse dixit as a military officer, to establish there a de facto government; and not merely to establish a de facto government, but to haul down the American flag and put the Cuban government in the possession of its power and authority.

How did the government of Cuba get the power to pass over the constitutional limitations that were imposed in its own constitution by the Platt amendment and go down to the Isle of Pines and hoist its flag there as the owner of that property? What did Gen. Leonard Wood do by that simple military decree of his, except to defy the constitution of Cuba, the laws of nations, and the laws of the United States, and of justice, public and private, and by his own pledged word which had sent these people into the Isle of Pines under deception.

Right there is the rub; and right there, Mr. President, is the trouble about getting this committee. That is the sore spot. They are afraid if ever a committee of this body goes down there and commences an examination, they will find reasons for that particular military abuse and outrage. That is what they will find, I have no doubt, and that is the reason of this shrinking and holding back in regard to sending a committee of the Senate there when everybody is petitioning for it. Even the innocent and elegant young women of the country, who know about the condition of the island, have had their sympathies aroused, and their interest excited, and their antagonism awakened by acts of injustice such as have been stated here. Under this de facto government a man could not be buried without the consent of Cuba. He could not be married without the consent of Cuba. Marriages in the Isle of Pines, except with the consent of the government, were forbidden. They could not organize a Masonic lodge there without the express consent of the Government of Cuba. They could not have personal, social meetings without the consent of the Government of Cuba.

This is what this infamous, despicable government de facto that General Wood set up there has inflicted upon those people. Here were two old men who had gone there to spend the evening of their days. Unfortunately perhaps, and yet for their glory, they were ex-Confederate soldiers. They had no family. One of them, after laboring very hard there planting out a little orchard, was taken sick in his tent and died. The people of the neighborhood, all Americans, gathered in there, and in their kindness, generosity, and friendship, full of sympathy and love, they sadly prepared a grave and a coffin and gave him decent Christian burial.

That night a lot of negroes, called the rural guard, were sent down, 21 miles from Nueva Gerona, by the alcalde there, to order that man to dig up the body of his brother and carry it to a consecrated graveyard to be buried. They came there at night and found the poor old brother in a state of prostration because of the loss of his lifelong companion. They said to him, "You must take up this body and carry it to Nueva Gerona and bury it." "Well, I am not able to do it. I can not do it. I could not ask my brethren here in the neighborhood to do it; they are not able; it will have to remain." Thereupon the next morning came back that rural guard. They exhumed the body, took the coffin and put it on a cart and hauled it to Nueva Gerona, and it was followed by a battalion of buzzards to its last resting place. It was dumped into consecrated ground in the potter's field. His old brother soon joined him in their eternal sleep. That is de facto government under the Wood ordination in a place from which he hauled down the American flag without authority. I denounce it. My soul revolts at such outrages.

There is no old Spanish law that has been the scourge of the people that has not been hunted up from its place of hiding, awaiting the hours of revenge upon true civilization, that is not applied by the Cuban Government, through the authority of this infamous government de facto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. MORGAN. I will simply remark that I will take the floor to-morrow and present half a dozen, or, at least, three other cases, one that of a gentleman—a man, I call him now—from Ohio, who is in the penitentiary suffering with long imprisonment there for no offense in God's world except refusing to be arrested by a negro for the nonpayment of an arbitrary and unlawful tax assessed by Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that is not done for the purpose of carrying on this argument, because I have spoken very much beyond my time to-day, and I am exceedingly fatigued. I hope the Senate will excuse me from going on to-day. We have time to consider this and every other matter connected with the Isle of Pines. If the Senate will kindly excuse me to-day, I will take the floor at a convenient hour to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask of the Senate that the resolution may go over, keeping its place, until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill No. 239, which was under consideration yesterday.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 239) relating to liability of common carriers by railroads in the District of Columbia and Territories, and common carriers by railroads engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to strike out the proviso at the bottom of page 2, in section 3, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the proviso, as follows:

Provided, however, That upon the trial of such action against any common carrier the defendant may set off therein any sum it has contributed toward any such insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I believe the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] should not be adopted. It proposes to strike out the proviso in section 3, which gives credit to the railroad company in any action brought against it for any sum that it may have contributed toward any insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity paid to the injured employee, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative. I know that those who have given some investigation to this subject in the interest of the railway employees are fearful that it might invalidate the law if the provision were stricken out. Besides, it seems just that any railroad company which has paid a certain amount of money as insurance or indemnity for an injury received should, in case of an action brought for that same injury, be credited with the amount so paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the word "none," insert "then for his parents; if none, then;" so that if amended the clause will read:

In the case of his death, to his personal representative for the benefit of his widow and children, if any; if none, then for his parents; if none, then for his next of kin dependent upon him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The purpose of this amendment will be at once apparent. In case of recovery for the death of an employee, it makes the parents of the deceased the beneficiaries where the employee leaves neither wife nor child. If there be no parents, then the next of kin dependent on the employee will recover. I am certain that the amendment will commend itself to the judgment of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have one more amendment which I offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

All questions of negligence and contributory negligence shall be for the jury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment to the title of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will come in after the bill has been passed.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill relating to liability of common carriers in the District of Columbia and Territories and common carriers engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees."

Mr. DANIEL subsequently said: Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the negligence liability bill was passed to-day. I will later state my reasons for that motion.

PURCHASE OF MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 of the joint resolution, before the word "unreasonable," strike out "extortionate or."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the time of the Senate for a short while. When the joint resolution was before the Senate on May 28 I was making some remarks with regard to it when I was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour and the withdrawal of the resolution by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

When interrupted I was inquiring as to the real purpose of the joint resolution. I had read some newspaper reports of declarations made by the Secretary of War, by members of the Canal Commission, by the chief engineer of the canal, and also some formal official utterances of some of these officials, all to the effect that under the law as it stands they considered it their duty to buy canal supplies wherever they could be bought the cheapest.

About a year ago, as everyone can remember, the President and other officials connected with the canal were proclaiming that in purchasing materials and ships for the canal they did not intend to be held up by American manufacturers and shipowners. They considered it their duty, so they said, to protect the Treasury from those who would plunder it by exacting unreasonable prices for what they had to sell. This was a remarkable position for a Republican Administration to take, and naturally it excited wide attention. But, however unusual and unexpected, it is safe to say that this expressed determination of the President to protect the Treasury received the hearty approval of the great body of the people who are to pay for the canal. The President was then in the high tide of his evanescent popularity, and although the people wondered at his utterances, they applauded him. That was true of the great body of the people.

But there were those representing special interests whose cupidity had been aroused by the millions the President had to expend, and who patriotically expected to realize enormous profits out of the materials they had to sell, who did not applaud. On the contrary, they viewed the President's attitude with indignation and alarm. Promptly they organized their forces to resist and discipline him. The "stand-patters" came swarming in from every direction, and a storm of protest was raised in every available quarter. The President's courage was put to the test, and, as usual, proved unequal to the strain. There was a great thundering by him in the index, with the customary Rooseveltian fiasco at the finish. The "Iron man at the White House" again proved himself to be no iron man at all, but only what Bismarck once declared Salisbury to be, "merely a pine lath painted the color of iron." The President surrendered, and, instead of buying canal material, as he vowed he would, as he repeatedly asserted it was his duty to do, in the cheapest market, he bought practically everything he purchased—98 per cent of the whole—at protected trust prices in America.

Let me give you an illustration of how the President signally failed to stand by his guns and to protect the Treasury. Among other things he had to purchase were two ships for the use of the Canal Commission. The prices at which American ships were offered were considered extortionate, as undoubtedly they were. The prices were practically double the price asked for foreign ships. For instance, two foreign ships of 6,000 tons each were offered for $750,000, while the lowest price at which two American ships of similar capacity were at first offered was $1,400,000. The President opened negotiations for the purchase of the foreign ships, but at the same time the batteries of the American shipbuilders and shipowners were opened on the President. The fight, while it lasted, was fast and furious. In speech, the President was bold and defiant; he vowed he would protect the Treasury and the people from extortion so monstrous. The papers were filled with stirring accounts of his brave front and high resolve. He was represented as being implacable and immovable.

Lay on, Macduff,
And damn'd be he that first cries "Hold, enough!"

Was the refrain that came rattling out from the precincts of the White House day after day. For a while—a very short while—it really looked as if the President, for once, at least, would stand his ground, but our hopes, alas, were in vain. He was not equal to the task. He hauled down his flag and surrendered. Instead of buying two foreign ships of 6,000 tons each for $750,000, he bought two American ships of 5,700 tons each for $1,300,000.

These ships, known as the Havana and the Mexico, were purchased of the New York and Cuban Mail Steamship Company, of New York, commonly known as "The Ward Line." They had been in commission and in active service for from seven to eight years. Last December I had occasion here in the Senate to refer to the purchase of these ships and to comment on the transaction. At that time I called attention to the fact—for it is a fact that no Senator here will dispute—that it is a rule, based on experience, for shipowners to write off 5 per cent of the cost value of the ship for every year it is in active service. In addition to that, it is generally agreed that the average life of a ship's boiler plant is about eight years, and that the boiler plant represents about 15 per cent of the total value of the steamer. I called attention to the fact that these ships, the Havana and the Mexico, had been in active service for from seven to eight years, as shown by the public records. Upon the strength of those facts I then contended, as I now contend, that the real market value of these ships at the time the Government purchased them could not have been more than about 60 per cent of their value when new. In the very nature of things, tested by whatever rule, there must have been a depreciation of from 35 to 40 per cent in the value of those ships. But at that time, Mr. President, I was not able to give the original cost of the ships; that is, the price paid the builders for constructing them. Now, however, I am able to supply that information.

At the hearings had before the Merchant Marine Commission during the spring and summer of 1905 Mr. Alfred G. Smith appeared as a witness. His testimony is set out in full in volume 1 of the hearings. He testified that he was secretary and treasurer of the Ward Line, and he gave a list of the ships constituting the fleet of that line, with the dates of their construction. On page 131, volume 1 of the hearings, Mr. Smith testified:

> We have two vessels of 5,700 tons each. They are 16-knot ships.

These were the Havana and the Mexico. Senator LODGE inquired as to how much they cost, and Mr. Smith answered:

> In the vicinity of $550,000 apiece; perhaps $600,000.

So, Mr. President, we have it directly from the lips of one of the chief officials of the company for whom the ships were built, and who sold them to the Government, that they cost originally in the vicinity of $550,000 each, or possibly, he said, as much as $600,000 each. Here, then, we have an example of how the President kept his promise, so vociferously and repeatedly made, to guard the Treasury and the people against the inroads of plunderers.

Two English ships of larger tonnage were offered for $750,000, but the opportunity to buy them was abandoned under pressure and two American ships of lighter tonnage were purchased for $1,300,000, which was from $100,000 to $200,000 more than the ships cost the owners when they were built.

Be it also remembered that under the rule universally observed by shipowners of writing off a percentage of the value of a vessel for each year of active service these ships were necessarily worth from 35 to 40 per cent less the day the Government bought them than they were the day the Cramps, who built them, delivered them to their owners.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator from Missouri taken the trouble to ascertain the difference in the cost of building ships at the present time and when these American ships were built? And does the Senator know how much that company is paying for two ships of practically the same tonnage to take the place of those ships which were sold to the Government?

Mr. STONE. I can not answer the last question. Can the Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can.

Mr. STONE. I wrote a letter, I will say, to this Mr. Smith, asking him for information, and as yet have received no information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have very correct information, which leads me to state that they are paying about $900,000 for each of the ships to take the place of the ships they sold to the Government; and not only that, but it is a fact as to the two foreign ships that when our Government went to purchase them, they found that they were already sold, and they found no other two ships that suited their purpose as well as these American ships.

Mr. STONE. Of course I do not know from what source the Senator from New Hampshire gets his information on which he bases the statement that the foreign ships were sold.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were sold.

Mr. STONE. I say I do not know from what source the Senator gets that information. I only know what I saw in the public press last summer as coming directly from the Secretary of War and the Canal Commission. Whether those statements are correct, of course I am not prepared to say.

The statement that the ships that are now being built would cost $900,000 is not significant. I know nothing about the ships that are being built. I have asked for a description of them, their tonnage, and their character, as compared with the ships sold to the Government. I have asked it of the officers of this company, and have not been able to obtain that information. They may cost $900,000 or twice $900,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I do not think he will be able to get reliable information from any source that the owners of those ships sought the privilege of selling them to this Government. They have not an excess of ships. The Government expressly desired to buy those ships, and put this company to great inconvenience in disposing of those two most excellent ships, because they themselves had to make a contract for the building of two additional new ships. If I remember correctly, they gave an order for three new ships. So that not only would American mechanics get the advantage of building two new ships because of this bargain with the Government, but they get the advantage of building three new ships.

Mr. STONE. But what has that to do, I ask the Senator, with the fact, as stated to the Senate and which the Senator will not gainsay, that these two ships, seven or eight years old at the time the Government purchased them, cost the Ward Line from $1,100,000 to $1,200,000 when built, and after using them for eight years they sold them to the Government for $1,300,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator taken the trouble to ascertain what repairs were put upon those ships?

Mr. STONE. I understand——

Mr. GALLINGER. While it is a fact that there is an annual depreciation in ships, that annual depreciation can be made good by proper repairs.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator contend that a ship's life might be continued forever by repairs?

Mr. GALLINGER. It can be continued for a long time.

Mr. STONE. The rule is to write off 5 per cent annually and keep up repairs.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not true that the average life of a ship is about twenty years. If that be true, evidently a ship that has been used for seven or eight years would not be as valuable as a new ship, and if the ship only cost $750,000, it evidently would not be worth $1,300,000, having been used for six or seven years.

Mr. STONE. So I contend.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] does not mean by that that a ship that cost $750,000 was sold for $1,300,000. I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will correct that statement.

Mr. STONE. The testimony of Mr. Smith, the secretary and treasurer of this company, before the Merchant Marine Commission last summer was that the ships cost, when built, in the vicinity of—to use his own expression—$550,000 each.

Mr. CLAY. For how much were they sold?

Mr. STONE. They were sold for $650,000 each.

Mr. CLAY. Then I misunderstood the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I only want to see if I understand the statement the Senator from Missouri is making, for it is a very important one. I understand him to say these two ships, which were bought for $650,000 each, originally cost, according to somebody's testimony, only about $550,000 each.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or $600,000 each.

Mr. STONE. Possibly $600,000 each.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, $600,000 each. At any rate, that, after five or six years' use——

Mr. STONE. Seven or eight years' use.

Mr. FORAKER. They were sold to the Government for more than the original cost. What I want to know is, on what authority does the Senator make that statement? The Senator doubtless stated, but I did not catch it.

Mr. STONE. I make the statement as to the original cost upon the authority of Mr. Smith, who is secretary and treasurer of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company, commonly known as the Ward Line. For that company the Cramps built these two vessels, known as the Mexico and the Havana, and this officer of the company testified before the Merchant Marine Commission what the cost of construction was.

Mr. FORAKER. When was that testimony given, if I may inquire?

Mr. STONE. I gave the date, or the page.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not ask the Senator to do it again. If it will be in the RECORD, I will find it.

Mr. STONE. It was in May, about a year ago.

Before I resume where I left off when interrupted, I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] a question. He asked me if I had investigated to find out what the difference in cost is in shipbuilding now as compared to the cost six or eight years ago, when the Havana and Mexico were built. Can the Senator from New Hampshire tell me what the difference is?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I can not with definiteness, but I understand it is considerably greater.

Mr. STONE. In what does the increase consist?

Mr. GALLINGER. In the first place, in the increased cost of labor.

Mr. STONE. How much is that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I say to the Senator that I can not definitely state it. I say that it costs more.

Mr. STONE. Are the wages paid laborers in shipyards very much more, or any more, now than they were six or seven years ago? I do not believe that is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are somewhat more; yes.

Mr. STONE. There has been no perceptible increase in the cost of material, I assume?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has sometimes, I think, argued that there is, and he attributes it to the trusts. I have heard the Senator make that argument.

Mr. STONE. Well, I do say that there is a very great increase in the cost of articles to American consumers by reason of the trusts and the protection they get under our tariff laws. I maintain that; but the question I am asking is whether there is any increase in the cost of material now over what it was six or seven years ago?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I have heard the Senator argue—I certainly have heard some of his associates argue—that in consequence of the trusts there is a very great increase in the cost of material to the American manufacturer.

Mr. STONE. The material that goes into ships can be brought in free of tariff duties. The law is so made in the interest of American shipbuilding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the argument he heard made by the Senator from Missouri and others is that there is a very large increase in the price of protected articles over what it was before the tariff was made higher. There has been no increase in the tariff in the last seven or eight years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator frankly that I can not state it to him with definiteness—of course, no Senator could without looking the matter up carefully—but I have information, which I think is reliable, that there is some considerable increase of cost.

Furthermore, Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me a moment, he ought not to lose sight of the fact that when this company parted with these two most excellent ships, it put them to considerable inconvenience and considerable loss. They had to immediately proceed to have new ships built in American ship yards. I think the Senator will search in vain for any data that will enable him to make a statement to the Senate and the country that this company sought the privilege of selling these ships to the Government. The Government wanted ships, and they discovered these two ships; they sought to purchase them, and the company sold them to the Government.

Mr. STONE. I know nothing about that. Does the Senator know anything about it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a correct statement of the matter.

Mr. STONE. It is unimportant, even though it be correct, whether the Government made the first overture or the steamship company made it. I should think that any company that could make such a bargain with the Government would not be slow in looking up the opportunity.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]—I hope I may be excused for making some inquiry about this, for it is new to me—the Government was in need of ships, this company happened to have the only ships that would answer the Government's purpose, and, under the stress of necessity, the Government paid the price that was necessary in order to get the ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is about the statement, except that I do not concede that the Government paid any more than a fair price, all things considered.

Mr. FORAKER. So I understand.

Mr. STONE. I think we could very well afford to leave the argument at that point. The Government did need ships and the Government had opened negotiations for the purchase of foreign ships. Two foreign ships of larger tonnage were offered to the Government. When it was seeking them throughout the world, when the President declared that it was his intention and his duty to seek them throughout the world wherever he could get the best for the least money, these two ships were offered to him; but he permitted the opportunity to purchase them to pass. His agent came home, and the two American ships were purchased at a price largely in excess—from one hundred to two hundred thousand dollars in excess—of what the ships cost when they were built, and that, too, after they had been in the active service of the company that owned them for a period of seven or eight years.

To my mind it is utterly absurd to say that the authorities, to whom was committed the duty of purchasing these ships, could not find ships in Europe. Mr. President, the one chief complaint that Americans are making is that our merchant marine has almost disappeared from the sea. Whatever the cause, the fact stands out to the shame of the American people that to-day we are at the very foot among the maritime powers of the earth, while the ships of the great powers of Europe are swarming the seas. To say that ships could not have been purchased in Europe, to my mind, is absurd. The fact remains that these vessels, at the time they were purchased, were worth approximately not more than $700,000, when valued under the rules by which ships are rated by shipowners and shipbuilders.

Mr. President, I assert that it would be hard to find a more patent or shameful instance of the misappropriation of public funds than this. It might be interesting while on this point, and especially to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], to know that a secretary of one William Nelson Cromwell was the agent of this Government who was sent abroad to negotiate for the purchase of foreign ships, and who reported that it was not possible to procure ships suitable for the service of the Canal Commission. It may be even still more interesting to know that this same William Nelson Cromwell appeared as a representative of this Government in the transaction which culminated in the purchase of the Havana and Mexico. It is really remarkable that this man Cromwell is present in some form in almost every important transaction connected with the Panama Canal.

This transaction, Mr. President, serves a double purpose: It shows that the President was right in declaring that the Government should have the markets of the world to draw from in order to protect the Treasury from unreasonable extortion, and it shows the weakness of the President and his inability to withstand pressure from powerful financial and political influences even in cases where his duty is perfectly plain. How much the Government has suffered in other purchases on account of the President's unfortunate vacillation and weakness, I can not tell. It has been stated in hearings before the Committee on Appropriations that 98 per cent of all materials purchased have been purchased in America. If this ship transaction can be taken as a sample of the whole, then the graft mounts up already into millions. The President's weakness is a costly thing to the American taxpayers.

Mr. President, there is no public need to pass this joint resolution. No one can doubt that the President will buy practically all canal materials in America, no matter what the difference in prices here and abroad may be.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I assume that the Senator from Missouri is stating his belief, but unfortunately for his contention both the President and the Secretary of War, in a communication to Congress, have stated the opposite of that contention to be the fact.

Mr. STONE. I am aware of that. I have read the document the Senator holds in his hand, and I have proceeded notwithstanding to say what I have.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Secretary of War says:

> If there is no prospect of early action by Congress, I shall direct Mr. Shonts, unless ordered by you to take a different course, that he accept the bid of William Simons & Co., of Renfrew, Scotland.

The President says in his reply to the letter of the Secretary of War:

> I approve of your views.

So that, so far as the record goes, it is the purpose both of the Secretary of War and of the President to purchase these materials and articles of manufacture from the foreign producer, unless Congress acts in this matter.

Mr. STONE. I do not care to make a sharp issue of that kind, but, Mr. President, just as positive assertions of the Executive purpose to buy ships and materials in foreign markets, unless they could be purchased in America at reasonable prices compared with foreign prices, were made months ago. I have shown you one example of how that pledge was kept, and the fact that 98 per cent of the materials purchased were purchased at home at the higher prices charged here is proof of my statement that the President would buy at home whether this joint resolution were adopted or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that there is a difference of condition. The communications from which I read are official communications from the President of the United States and the Secretary of War sent to Congress. The others were published statements, as I understand.

Mr. STONE. Not altogether. I beg the Senator's pardon. Some of the matter that I have put in the RECORD in former remarks was from official documents, from reports of the Secretary of War to the President and from officials of the Canal Commission to the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was not aware that they were official papers.

Mr. STONE. Some of them were.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I have been looking through the testimony taken on this subject before the Interoceanic Canals Committee, and I find this matter all gone over by Mr. Shonts in his testimony, at pages 1425 and following. I should like to read, if the Senator does not object to my taking that much of his time, two or three paragraphs.

Mr. STONE. I would rather the Senator would read them in his own time.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not want to take any time on my own account.

Mr. STONE. The Senator will be at liberty——

Mr. FORAKER. I thought it was only fair to Mr. Shonts, who made the purchase directly, that his statement should be read.

Mr. STONE. I have not said a word about Mr. Shonts.

Mr. FORAKER. I know, but the Senator has stated the transaction, and inasmuch as it appears from Mr. Shonts's testimony that he himself made this purchase directly, supervising it, at any rate, his statement as to how they came to pay as much as they did is important.

Mr. STONE. The Senator can take that up in his own time.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will not insist.

Mr. STONE. No, Mr. President, if we are to judge the future by the past, there is no room for questioning what course the President will adopt. The men who contributed the stupendous slush funds, aggregating millions upon millions of dollars, to carry the last three Presidential elections for the Republican candidates, almost of necessity have their grasp upon those who accepted their princely donations. The beneficiaries of these enormous corruption funds may sometimes wince and shrink from the task imposed upon them, and to hide the shame of it may now and then perform some spectacular stunt in the limelight and before the galleries; but in the end the forces which operate behind the curtain and hold the strings will have their way. But, Mr. President, there has been so much of this blustering, and it has attracted such wide attention that something must be done to relieve the situation. Something must be provided for public credulity to feed upon. A door must be opened for escape, and a soft place must be made for the President to fall. The scheme for all this is wrapped up in this resolution. A short time ago the Secretary of War, in a public speech, which was widely scattered through the country, declared that he considered it the duty of those charged with constructing the canal to build it as cheaply as possible, and that under existing law they had no option to do otherwise. This was merely a repetition of what had been said before.

But in this speech the Secretary went on to say that the whole question had been submitted to Congress with a view to having the legislative department prescribe a rule for the guidance of those into whose hands the work of constructing the canal had been committed. In substance and effect the same declaration by the Secretary of War is repeated in his letter to the President of May 14, 1906, the one referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island, and which was transmitted to the Senate and House by the President the following day. Let me read an extract from the Secretary's letter:

> The result of a consideration of general principles of law and the practice of the Government, in the absence of specific direction to the contrary, is that in the construction of the Panama Canal in the Canal Zone on the Isthmus, which is outside the tariff wall surrounding the United States proper, and into which, by virtue of the Hay-Varilla treaty with the Republic of Panama, material, supplies, and machinery of all kinds for the construction of the canal are to be introduced free from tariff or imposts, it is your duty to buy where you can obtain the material, supplies, and machinery at the cheapest price, other conditions with respect to quality, prompt delivery, etc., being equal. This view it seems to me is confirmed by the failure of Congress to direct any different course on your part, although the matter was brought to its attention more than a year ago, and your view of your duty in the premises, if Congress took no further action, was clearly indicated.

So they bring the matter again before the Congress for their action. Here is a kind of mute appeal to the Congress to help them out of a hole. The President has given up his fight and surrendered, but henceforth, as he goes on patiently bearing his yoke, he must have some excuse to give the people for abandoning the path of duty. And so the Macedonian cry comes over from the White House to Congress. This joint resolution is the response Congress makes to that appeal. Hereafter when the President goes on buying trust materials at trust prices, as he has been doing, and would continue to do whether this resolution should be adopted or not, he can excuse himself on the ground that Congress has established a rule for his guidance. He can shelter himself under this resolution and unload his sins on Congress. It would be a sham performance, of course, but it would answer the purpose. That is about the only possible use to which this resolution can be put. Under its terms, it does not, in fact, restrain or limit the President, except when American materials are offered at reasonable prices; then the resolution would require him to purchase in America. I do not know what the President or the authors of this resolution would consider "reasonable" prices for American materials. I presume it would mean reasonable as compared to the prices offered in other countries; but what the President will consider reasonable is another thing. Nobody imagines that the President, or that anyone else, would go abroad to buy materials for this canal, or for any other purpose, if they could be had at home for prices which are reasonable as compared with foreign prices. There is utterly no need for enacting a law directing the President to purchase at home under circumstances of that nature. With or without this joint resolution, or any other rule on the subject, no one supposes that the President would buy abroad unless the prices asked at home were unreasonable. The very thing the President, in the first instance, declared his intention to do was to go abroad only in the event the manufacturers and shipowners of the United States sought to extort unreasonable prices. That was all anybody could expect or desire him to do. He needs no Congressional authority to carry out that policy. And this resolution, if adopted, will not clothe him with any power he can not exercise already. It would leave him standing substantially where he stands now without it.

The Senator from Rhode Island read an extract from the letter of Mr. Secretary Taft to the effect that certain materials, dredges among other things, on which bids have been taken, would be purchased abroad unless the joint resolution should be adopted. Among the bids that were made, two or three have been mentioned in the Senate. A company in Maryland, dredge builders, have offered two dredges at a price about $70,000 in excess of the price at which a Scotch firm offers to furnish them. Is this a reasonable price asked by the Maryland company? Is it fair, reasonable, just—just to the Government, to the taxpayers, to the Treasury? If so, then the President should buy here, not abroad. Why would he go abroad, why would Mr. Secretary Taft advise him to go to Scotland to buy instead of buying in Maryland, unless it be the opinion of the Secretary and the President that the price asked by the Maryland dredge builder is exorbitant and unreasonable?

The Senator from Rhode Island says that unless we pass the joint resolution they will go abroad and buy. Very well. If the price is unreasonable they can go abroad anyhow under the terms of this resolution and buy, and should do so if the price asked here is unreasonable. On the other hand, if the price is a fair price they can buy here without the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri were buying these dredges and had to take into consideration the prices respectively of the Maryland Steel Company and the concern in Scotland, he would have to pay 45 per cent duty on the foreign dredges, which would make the foreign dredges cost $175,000 more instead of $70,000 less than the American dredges.

Mr. STONE. I fully understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the question which we are here considering, and that is the question which must necessarily be considered by the President in determining whether the bids of domestic competitors are reasonable or not.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator want the Senate to understand that the joint resolution in any regard affects the tariff?

Mr. ALDRICH. The joint resolution provides that the Government of the United States shall do what it requires its citizens to do—to buy goods of American production; and because the labor cost in the United States is so much greater than abroad, the Government is forced to the necessity of levying duties upon foreign products. The joint resolution says in effect that the Government of the United States ought to stand in relation to these transactions the same as an American citizen stands.

Mr. STONE. I am not sure but that the Senator is right about that, but——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Rhode Island is evidently mistaken as to the view the President takes in determining whether the price asked for a domestic article is reasonable or unreasonable.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not undertaking to express the views of the President of the United States, and I am willing, if the Senator assumes that he can, that he shall speak for the President of the United States. We are undertaking here to express the opinion of the Congress of the United States as to the policy which ought to be pursued in the purchase of materials for the construction of the canal.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to what the correspondence shows are the facts. According to the letter of Secretary Taft, the difference between the price of the foreign article and the domestic article is only about 8 per cent. The Senator from Rhode Island says that the tariff upon the article would be 45 per cent, and that is the matter which induces the President to make this communication to Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not say that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is it the idea of the Senator from Rhode Island that if an article is offered by a domestic manufacturer at the cost in a foreign country plus the tariff that that will be a reasonable price? In other words, if these two dredges should cost but $654,000 abroad, then an American manufacturer might add to that sum 45 per cent, or something below 45 per cent, and that the President would be in duty bound to give the contract to the American manufacturer?

Mr. ALDRICH. In determining the reasonableness of a domestic price of course the President is not bound to take into consideration alone the foreign price plus the duty, but the reasonableness in the United States growing out of the competition between domestic producers.

Mr. PATTERSON. Ah!

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Does he not think that if the Government of the United States is to be forced to buy in the cheapest markets in the world American citizens ought to be permitted the same privilege?

Mr. PATTERSON. I certainly think they should be. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is not the converse of that proposition also true?

Mr. PATTERSON. No. My question was going to the converse of the proposition. Because, under the American tariff, the trusts may rob the American consumers, is that any reason why they should be robbed the second time when the Government may go into the markets of the world to make the purchase? Should not one robbery be enough?

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator from Colorado to say that he thought American citizens ought to have the same privilege of buying abroad?

Mr. STONE. With all due deference to Senators——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STONE. I think I would rather not have these arguments injected into my speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. With the consent of the Senator from Missouri, as bearing upon the question he is now discussing, I desire to present an amendment which I intend to propose when it is in order to do so; and I ask that it may now be read in order that it may also be ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia presents a proposed amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the joint resolution the following:

Provided, That in making said purchases a larger price shall not be paid for any such article of domestic production or manufacture than the price at which the same or similar articles of domestic production or manufacture are sold or offered for sale in foreign markets, or for export to foreign countries. And for the ascertainment of the prices at which articles are sold or offered for sale in foreign countries, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to procure so far as practicable and to report to the President the following information:

First. What articles and classes of goods produced or manufactured in the United States such as are required, as material and equipment, in the construction of the Panama Canal have, during the year ending December 31, 1905, been sold or offered for sale in foreign countries, or for export to foreign countries by the producers or manufacturers thereof or through their representatives or agents at prices less than the same and similar articles and classes of goods were during the same period sold in the United States by the producers or manufacturers thereof or through their representatives or agents, having special reference in said report to all classes of tools, machinery, steel rails, cars, engines, dredges, vehicles, cement, and other materials largely and principally required in the construction of said canal, and in the maintenance, equipment, and operation of the Panama Railroad.

Second. What, separately stated as to each class of goods and with specification of articles so far as practicable, was the general average during the said period of the comparative prices in sales in the United States and in the several foreign countries.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is further directed to make said reports as soon as practicable, and thereafter in the year 1907 and in each succeeding year during the continuance of the construction of said canal, it shall be his duty to procure the said information, and to report to the President concerning said sales in the United States and in foreign countries during the calendar year next preceding the said report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I repeat that the only purpose the resolution can serve is to excuse the President's capitulation to the trusts. Hereafter I imagine there will be few American offerings found to be unreasonable, and none extortionate. An enormous amount of structural steel will be required for use on the canal. The steel trust, as is well known, has two prices for its products—one for their protected American market, and the other for the open market of the world. If steel rails and other steel products can be shipped to Europe and sold at a profit in competition with products manufactured there, then it would be unreasonable for the trust to demand of the Government a higher price than they sell for in Europe. Certainly they could afford to sell to the Government at their export prices on delivery at their mills, thereby adding the cost of transportation to their profits. Anything above that would, in fact, be unreasonable, but I would take no serious chance in predicting that the prices the Government will pay will be nearer the domestic price than the foreign price. This resolution merely crowns the triumph of the trusts over the President.

And, Mr. President, why should not this be so? If we are to continue this Republican policy of a prohibitory tariff, why, indeed, should not the Government itself bear the burden it imposes by law on the citizen?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's line of argument, but right in connection with what he has just stated, with his leave, I should like to ask him one question.

Mr. STONE. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator find an instance anywhere, in Europe or elsewhere, where a government is engaged in any public work, that it does not invariably, always, without exception, buy its material and employ its labor at home, whether that government is free trade or is protection? Will he not find that free-trade England does precisely what protective Germany does and what France does, and that there is not an instance in the civilized world where government is engaged in expending its revenue for public works that it goes outside for its labor or material?

Mr. GALLINGER. And confine the carriage to their own ships.

Mr. HALE. And as the Senator from New Hampshire says, in addition to that they confine the transportation to their own ships.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think every government does wisely to buy at home its materials for use in the construction of public works, and does wisely to employ its labor, as far as practicable, from among its own people, but——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. STONE. I will.

Mr. CARMACK. I think the statement of the Senator from Maine is very incorrect indeed. I think the British Government has purchased in the United States material and supplies to a very large extent for Government purposes, in the colonies at least, for public works.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator before this debate is terminated—it is not evident that it is going to terminate to-day—would bring in an instance where for Government work, paid for by taxation of the people of the Government, there has been in any single instance a purchase of material or even labor for it from outside.

Mr. CARMACK. I happen to remember the case of the Atbara bridge. The material was purchased almost exclusively in the United States; in Philadelphia, I believe.

Mr. HALE. That was a colony.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I do not like to interfere in this debate, because the Senator from Missouri is making a very fine speech, but as it seems to be the order of the day that he shall be interrupted, I want to correct the statement made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I know. The Senator is very indulgent and complacent about it. As a matter of fact, it was necessary for military operations to build a bridge across the Blue Nile at Atbara. As a matter of fact, advertisements were made for the building of it. As a matter of fact, an American firm got the contract as against every bid made by English firms; and there were many bids. The American firm got the bid for two reasons: One was that the bid was cheaper, and the other was because the bridge could be finished in half the time. That is one instance that I call to mind just now.

Mr. HALE. That does not in any way interfere with my proposition. The Indian matter was a matter of Indian revenues. It was an Indian colonial matter.

Mr. MONEY. It was an Egyptian matter.

Mr. HALE. Well, it was colonial.

Mr. MONEY. I want to state, if the Senator from Missouri will excuse me, that it was a military operation in the Sudan; and it was necessary, having extended the railroad up from Cairo, to build a bridge across the Blue Nile near Khartum; and it was built after advertisements, as I stated, which were published. There were many bids. An American firm got the bid for two reasons; first, because the bridge could be finished in half the time offered by any British firm, and, second, the American bid was lower. Now, that is a fact which, I think, goes directly against the statement of the Senator from Maine, and if he will allow me——

Mr. HALE. No; I renew my proposition that you can not find an instance where the Government is expending money drawn by taxation from its people, and in this case we are furnishing all the money in the canal. Panama does not furnish it; we furnish it. We pay the taxes——

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HALE. Wait a moment. In no case will it be found where, like in this case, the Government pays the bill and does the work it either prefers foreign people or foreign material.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will not accept the statement I made, which is a true one and can be verified——

Mr. LODGE. It has no relation. It is Egyptian money. It is not built by British taxpayers.

Mr. MONEY. I know it is Egyptian money, but the contract was made by the Government.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. HALE. I still insist on my proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to say that in the case of building the viaduct in Burma the material was purchased in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. That is in East India.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I might find instances by some reflection and attention to them, but of what consequence is it? I imagine it will be somewhat difficult to find a country of sufficient importance to engage in the construction of great enterprises even approximating the magnitude of the Panama Canal where the home market for material is so hedged about by tariffs as to enable the home producer to make such exactions as can be made here in America.

I agree, as I have said, that it would be a wise public policy to purchase at home, thereby keeping our money at home, and to that extent giving employment to our own capital and labor. I agree that it is best, in the prosecution of public enterprises, to employ home labor instead of foreign labor. A proposition of that kind is so evidently true that it will be universally agreed to. There can be no argument about that. But when the home producer of materials needed undertakes to exact prices that are, in effect, as my friend the Senator from North Carolina, in front of me, says, a hold up; when the producers of these materials set two prices upon their products, one for use in foreign markets and another for use at home; when the price at which they sell to foreign consumers is vastly less than what they exact of the home consumer, and would exact of the Government if they could, then, I say, the Government ought to be clothed with power to protect itself against being plundered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does not the Senator think that the joint resolution does precisely that thing? It was the purpose of the committee in reporting it to cover that ground exactly.

Mr. STONE. I have said, and I repeat, that the joint resolution, to my mind, is simply a tinkling cymbal; it is a sound without meaning; there is nothing to it. The President can do now just what he could do under the joint resolution. Without the resolution it might not be strictly his legal duty to buy in the home market even at reasonable prices, yet it would be his patriotic and moral duty to do it, and he would do it. The trouble about it is that the President in future will do what he has done in the past. Threatening the home manufacturers and shipowners to go abroad, possibly with some hope of coercing them, he was himself coerced, and has purchased 98 per cent of everything he has bought in the home market at trust prices.

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. I will yield; but I will say to the Senator that I am anxious to conclude.

Mr. HALE. I do not remember whether the Senator himself took part in the debate, but other Senators upon the other side whom I see before me did, which arose when the bill was up providing for the transportation of Government supplies, mainly coal, to the Philippine Islands. I had the honor to be in charge of the bill, and we debated it here for two or three days. I remember that both the Senators from Colorado, the Senator from Texas, and other Senators took part. We finally adjusted it by language almost the same as that in the pending joint resolution coming from the Committee on Finance. We provided that all transportation of Government supplies to the Philippine Islands should be in American-built ships unless the President found that the bidding for carriage by American firms in American ships was unreasonable or the result of improper combination. The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] will remember it, or it may be that it was he who suggested the last words that we put in, when everybody voted for the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken.

Mr. HALE. I may be.

Mr. STONE. I hope the Senators will not get into a debate on that point.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact, when he says the words are meaningless and that the joint resolution is meaningless, that it is substantially just the policy that was adopted after full debate in the transportation of Government supplies to the Philippines, and the committee had that in view when they reported the pending joint resolution. If the Senator will look up that bill and will look up the debate, he will find that we went all over it then and finally adjusted it, everybody, I think, voting for it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I would have no objection—I do not see that anyone could have any objection—to directing the President to ship whatever we had to transport to the Philippines in American vessels, unless the rate charged should be exorbitant, and not to ship under a foreign flag. If we could carry our provisions and materials under the American flag at a reasonable price, there could be no objection to giving legislative direction to the President. But at the same time it seems to me to be an utterly useless thing to do. It is impossible to conceive of any American President or official fit to hold his office who would not do without that law what the law required.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. STONE. So in purchasing materials for the canal perhaps there is no substantial objection to giving some legislative direction, but as a practical proposition this resolution is useless.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri think that the President should purchase these two dredges, which is the practical question now before the Senate, of foreign producers or of domestic producers?

Mr. STONE. Do I think that he could?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; do you think he should, as a matter of duty? What is the Senator's idea, taking into consideration the difference in price, as to what is the duty of the President in the premises?

Mr. STONE. No; I have not given consideration to it. It has been stated that there is a difference of between $60,000 and $70,000 in the bids.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the foreign bid is approximately $67,000 lower than the domestic bid.

Mr. STONE. I do not know the cost of these dredges. I do not know the per cent of difference. I have not gone into that, and I can not now go into a calculation of that kind. It is sufficient to say that if the American price is a reasonable price, a fair and just price, compared with other prices, the purchase ought to be made in America. I do not hesitate to say that anything an American has to sell, if he will sell it to us at a reasonable price as compared with foreign prices, ought to be bought here. That goes without saying. But here is the point: If it is a reasonable price, a fair price, why does the Secretary of War say, as you declare he does, that without this resolution he will go abroad to buy? It must be that, in his opinion, the price asked here as compared with the foreign price is unreasonable; and if it is unreasonable, then the domestic dredge builder should be compelled to lower his bid to a reasonable price or the Secretary should go abroad and buy.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. STONE. For a question; certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Missouri, after making a careful calculation, should find that the difference in the price of these dredges was the difference in wages between that paid in Europe and that paid in America, would he still favor the purchase of foreign-made dredges, when at least $500,000 of the money we are to invest in these two is labor and not over $200,000 of it is material and that material has to be prepared and is labor? If the Senator wants to buy these foreign manufactured articles and cut out American labor, and compel American labor to come down to the price of the pauper labor in Europe, I should like to have him state so on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Oh, the Senator, as usual with Senators representing his school of thought, begins a harangue about American labor.

Mr. SCOTT. I should think the Senator from Missouri had heard enough of that in the last few campaigns to convince him that perhaps the American people can not be fooled on that proposition.

Mr. STONE. But the American people, or a great number of them, have been fooled, and badly fooled, by just such speeches as the Senator's.

Mr. President, the price of American labor is higher than the price of European labor, and undoubtedly that should be a consideration which should be kept in mind. I would expect the President in buying these dredges to pay a higher price for them in America than he would pay for them in Scotland, and nobody will have any quarrel with him on that account, provided the price was a fair and reasonable price as compared with the offerings of foreign dredge builders. Whether the domestic bids are reasonable or unreasonable is a question of fact that must be determined upon a consideration of all the circumstances to be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the kind permission of the Senator, I want to give him the three bids that were received for these dredges.

Mr. STONE. They have been given here before.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator admits he does not know what they are.

Mr. STONE. No; I did not admit it, but I could not——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator does not wish me to give them, I will not trouble him.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was a Dutch bid of $850,000, an American bid of $724,000, and a Scotch bid of $654,000. The Dutch bid was much above the American. The Scotch bid was $70,000 less; but it is clearly shown that with the cost of inspection, sending men over there, and various other expenses that will follow, the difference between the American and the Scotch bids will not be more than from $40,000 to $50,000. It is a very close bid, and I am glad to hear the Senator say that——

Mr. STONE. If it be true that it is a close bid, then what is the need of this resolution to enable the President to buy them here?

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to complete the sentence by saying that I am very glad to have the Senator from Missouri say that he thinks the President can honorably and justly take into consideration the difference between American labor and foreign labor; but I fear if he did that without the direction that the joint resolution gives him, he would be criticised by the Senator a little later on.

Mr. STONE. The trouble about the resolution is, as I have said, that it is absolutely unnecessary, and to do an unnecessary thing with so much solemnity gives to it some color of suspicion, at least. I mean as to its real purpose. But when last interrupted I was asking the question, Why should the Government protest against a wrong it compels the citizen to suffer? True—"and pity 'tis, 'tis true"—the President backed down from his position, but his bold protest was an indictment of the tariff policy of his party. The Canal Zone is outside of the tariff wall of the United States, and therefore the President could purchase anywhere without subjecting his purchases to the exactions of our tariff laws; and since the people are to furnish the money for the construction of the canal, the President should have the right to buy in the open market and to go abroad if he should find it necessary to protect the Treasury of the people, but he has that right already. When I say that the President should have this right, I am, of course, speaking as a Democrat and from that viewpoint. From the Republican standpoint the Government should buy whatever it needs from American manufacturers without regard to price, and should not only not protest against exorbitant prices, but should be glad to pay for its materials what it compels the American consumer at home to pay. This situation presents some object lessons that ought to be very instructive to the American people. This resolution purports to give to the President a club with which to compel the American manufacturer to offer reasonable prices for his commodities. Of course it is a club the President will never use. It is one of those big sticks that will lie idle in his hands, but the fact that you propose to arm him in that way affords an instructive lesson to the people. The people themselves, the consumers of the country, have no club of this character in their hands. They are helpless; they have no means of resistance; they can only submit. Mr. President, I am more than willing to break the grasp monopoly has on the Government, but to my thinking it is of infinitely greater importance to tear it loose from the throats of the people. That is all I care to say. This much I desired to say before the curtain is rung down and the lights go out on this ludicrous performance.

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from Tennessee will yield to me I desire to offer an amendment, which I should like to have read now, and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the joint resolution, the following proviso:

Provided, That in making such purchases no price shall be paid for articles of domestic production and manufacture greater than the price for which such like American-produced article can be bought in any foreign market.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Tennessee has taken the floor with a view to addressing the Senate. I will not ask him to yield, but I want to put in the RECORD what I was denied the privilege——

Mr. CARMACK. I will yield the floor to the Senator in a very little while. I am going to occupy the floor a very little while.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to move an executive session in a few minutes.

Mr. CARMACK. I will yield to the Senator now, if he prefers.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Tennessee, for I would prefer to put in the RECORD that which I am about to call attention to immediately following the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

In the course of his remarks the Senator from Missouri commented on the purchases for use in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal of two ships from the Ward Line, as it is popularly called. He said, in that connection, that $1,300,000 were paid for the two ships, $650,000 each; that the ships were six or seven years in use at the time when they were so purchased, and that the original cost of the ships was in the vicinity, I believe he expressed it on the authority of some one who testified in regard to the matter, of $550,000 each. So it would appear that when these ships were purchased by the United States Government for use in connection with the Panama Canal and its construction more was paid for them, to the extent of $100,000 to $200,000, than they originally cost.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me a slight interruption?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I remember very distinctly the testimony of Mr. Smith. Offhand he did say that these ships cost $550,000 or possibly $600,000 each, but, if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will follow that testimony along for just one paragraph, he will find that Mr. Smith testified that they had two other ships of 4,500 tons each. These ships are 5,700 tons, and the 4,500 ton-ships cost $550,000 each.

Mr. CARMACK. It seems to me that Senators might elaborate this matter and bring out such facts as they desire in their own time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] to yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. CARMACK. I yielded for an interruption by the Senator from Ohio; but, it seems to me, if Senators desire to discuss this matter at length, they should take the floor to do so in their own time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Tennessee had yielded to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CARMACK. I did yield to the Senator from Ohio, but I did not yield for general debate.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I will finish what I have to say, and it will not take me very long.

The statement made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was of such a character that I thought it ought to be looked up, and I have taken the trouble to find out what testimony there is on that subject. I have before me the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. I read from page 1428, volume 2, the testimony of Mr. Shonts. He was examined in regard to the purchase of these ships. His testimony on this subject commences two or three pages earlier. After explaining the necessity for ships and their efforts to find ships abroad, he then states that he heard of these two ships of the Ward Line. Some one who was a representative of the Cunard Line had told him about them, and expressed the opinion that he might be able to assist him in purchasing them. This representative of the Cunard Line told him that the price of the ships was $750,000 each. It was finally thought that possibly they could be secured for $700,000 each, this coming after considerable negotiation. Then Mr. Shonts testified further, as follows:

I said: "I am willing to pay, flat, $650,000 for each of those ships, subject to survey and inspection, if they are all right, but I will not pay a cent over. I will not pay any commissions to anybody; and if you want to be good enough to help us get those ships at that price, as a patriotic duty or as a citizen, I will be very glad to have your assistance." He took the task in hand, and he finally got it through. That was the way the ships were bought for $650,000.

Omitting two or three immaterial questions and answers, Mr. Shonts proceeds, as follows:

He told me that the ships were well built, and were built at a time when material was cheap, and that they had spent a great many thousand dollars additional to their original cost in strengthening them since because of heavier tonnage that they wanted to carry, and that he thought now, besides the delay of a year and a quarter or a year and a half to get new ships, it would cost a good deal more money to build them than the $700,000. I was talking to him on the $700,000 basis. He thought they were cheap, considering their condition and age, at $700,000.

At another place Mr. Shonts testifies that after he had purchased these ships he caused them to be insured for their full cost, $650,000 each; and the insurance companies, he remarks, evidently thought they were worth what they had paid for them. That testimony is on page 1429.

At page 1430, on the same subject, Mr. Shonts, further testifying, said:

Senator KITTREDGE. What was included in the purchase—the furniture of the ship?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes; and the silver and the china and the linen; but they agreed to take those things back at a fair price, because they were marked with the Ward Line marks, and we knew we would want to put in our own linen and our own china, etc.

Then he further testifies, at page 1432, that he was anxious to buy American ships; and at page 1433, speaking on that point, he says:

Mr. SHONTS. Yes; we thought that we could afford to pay a little more for an American ship, if we had to, in order to carry the American flag and have the benefit of the coastwise shipping.

I might read further to the same effect, but the substance of it all is, or the effect of it all is, that while it is true that these ships perhaps cost only $550,000 originally, yet they were constructed at a time when material and labor were cheaper than at the present time, and the Government bought not only the ship, but all the furniture, all the linen, all the china, and everything else that belonged to the ship. It is true that the insurance companies evidently thought the ships worth all they had cost, because they insured them for their full value.

It is also true that they had a very laudable purpose in view in seeking to get ships of American registry and American construction, so that they might not only engage in the coastwise trade, but that they might fly the American flag. It seems to me it would be rather a pitiable spectacle to see the United States Government constructing a great canal, using, in that connection, ships for carrying the material for it and flying over those ships foreign flags.

Mr. STONE. They could fly the American flag.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, it is possible——

Mr. CARMACK. I must decline to yield further, Mr. President, for general discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CARMACK. I yielded to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] for an explanation, and he is making an argument in reply to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I think, in common fairness, he ought to do that in his own time.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to an interruption.

Mr. CARMACK. But I do.

Mr. FORAKER. But inasmuch as the Senator from Tennessee objects, I shall proceed.

I will say, in answer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], that it is true, I believe, that under the law and regulations an American owner of a foreign-built ship which has been admitted to American registry may fly the American flag; but it is also true that nobody, as I understand it, takes any pride in flying an American flag over a foreign-built ship. I do not know of anybody who owns a ship, if it is only a yacht for pleasure purposes, who does not want it admitted to American registry, so that he will have a right to fly the American flag without any question whatever, and so that it will be what the flag indicates—an American ship, with American registry, entitled to all the rights and privileges that ships admitted to American registry enjoy.

So I say when it is stated that these ships cost $550,000 each, and were years afterwards purchased at a higher price than that, the fact is lost sight of, which should be borne in mind, that, as Mr. Shonts has stated, thousands of dollars have been expended upon them to strengthen them, to improve them, and to make them better than they were; and then there are all the other considerations to which I have adverted.

That is all I care to say. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for his kindness in yielding to me.

I will now ask the Senator to yield to me further for morning business, that I may make a report. I offer an amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill——

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator that under the new rule, that is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. This is not against the new rule, as I understand it. I have looked that up.

Mr. TELLER. I think it is.

Mr. FORAKER. It is merely offering an amendment intended to be proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from Ohio is in order so long as he has the floor. He did not ask any Senator to yield to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, under the rule, must hold that it is not in order. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. May I not make this report?

Mr. CARMACK. I have no objection to the Senator making his report if he will submit it without debate. I have a few words to say, and I want to get through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Tennessee does not deny me the privilege of making a report.

Mr. TELLER. I insist that the Senator is out of order and that the Chair has held him to be out of order.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think I am out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will read that portion of the rule applicable to this case. It is as follows:

It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill.

Mr. FORAKER. But, Mr. President, I had the floor. I had not yielded the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asked the Senator from Tennessee to yield to him for morning business.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, I beg pardon. I forgot that.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, my views with respect to this matter are expressed in the amendment which I have already offered:

That in all contracts for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal preference shall be given to articles of domestic production or manufacture, conditions of quality and price being equal.

Mr. President, that amendment is in line with the precedents, with the practice of the Government, and with various provisions of existing law regulating the purchase of Government material and supplies. Such is the law with respect to the purchase of materials for public improvements in the United States, for while that law provides that preference shall be given to American material, it has been uniformly held that this does not justify giving preference to American material where foreign material of equal quality can be had at a cheaper price. The law with respect to the purchase of military supplies is as follows:

The Quartermaster's Department of the Army, in obtaining supplies for the military service, shall state in all advertisements for bids for contracts that a preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal.

That is the very language which I propose in my amendment for the purchase of material and supplies for the construction of the Panama Canal.

The Government acted under that law in the purchase of all supplies for the Philippine Islands, buying supplies from Australia and from other countries instead of buying them here in the United States, for the plain, simple, business reason that they could be bought cheaper in other countries than they could be bought from American producers and manufacturers.

So, Mr. President, I can see no reason in this case for departing from the established precedents and practice of the Government as laid down in its statute law, in order to make a wider field for graft and extortion on the part of our American manufacturers.

The joint resolution reported by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] provides that—

Purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal—

That is, the purchase of the material and equipment—

shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable.

That is very significant, Mr. President, but for all practical purposes it is, in my judgment, without any value whatever, for there is no practical standard erected to determine what shall be extortionate or unreasonable. As Senators on the other side have suggested, the amount of the tariff added to the price of the foreign competing article would not be regarded as extortionate by the President of the United States and that would be a reasonable ground to proceed upon, for tariffs are enacted for the express purpose of enabling American manufacturers to add the duty to the price, and if they did so, the President might very naturally say they were doing only what was intended by the law should be done.

So, I say, there is no practical standard. You can not make a standard by comparing foreign prices with prices in the United States, because by the passage of this joint resolution you will have expressly rejected that standard; and unless the President can find some other way to determine this question, unless he can determine with reasonable accuracy the cost of the production of the American article, or determine with reasonable accuracy whether the profits to be derived by the American bidder would be excessive and unreasonable, there is no way by which he can determine according to any reasonable and practical standard whether the prices fixed in these bids are reasonable or unreasonable or extortionate or otherwise.

I say, Mr. President, the language of this joint resolution reported by the Senator from Rhode Island is significant, although it has no practical value:

Unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable.

That is an admission, Mr. President, that the committee which reported this joint resolution recognized that some such provision was necessary in order to protect the Government from extortionate prices; that without some such provision the Government would be absolutely at the mercy of the protected American monopolists, who would extort from it whatever price they might deem proper to demand, and that the reserved right on the part of the Government to purchase abroad was the only protection which the Government could have against the extortion it feared.

It is an admission, Mr. President, that under our protective-tariff system there is no effective competition in the United States to regulate prices; that there is nothing in the world to restrain the protected manufacturer of the United States from holding the Government up at the muzzle of a tariff schedule and compelling it to stand and deliver, and that the only protection, the only escape, which the Government can have where such extortion is practiced is to purchase abroad. That is the protection which the Government has reserved to itself, or attempted to reserve to itself, in this resolution, but where is there any protection for the American consumer who himself is confronted with extortionate prices? What remedy has he?

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] suggested a while ago that the citizen of the United States should have the same right that is given to the Government. I should like to give to every citizen of the United States the very same right that is offered to the Government in this resolution; that he shall not, in the purchase of his clothing, his farming utensils, his tools of trade, his household and kitchen furniture, be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture where he "deems the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable." I would give him the very right which the committee seeks to give in this resolution to the Government, but which, in my opinion, is absolutely nugatory and will have no effect whatever.

Mr. President, we are engaged in a great enterprise, one that will be of incalculable benefit to the people of the United States and to all mankind, but which is likely to cost us very dear before we begin to realize upon the investment. I would, therefore, do everything in my power to limit the cost of this great enterprise, to diminish the burden upon the American people. Senators talk, Mr. President, about giving wages to American labor by buying articles in the United States—buying ships and material in the United States at a higher cost than they can be had elsewhere. Every dollar of extra cost that is paid in the construction of the Panama Canal must be paid for by the taxpayers and by the laborers of the United States. Every extra dollar which you add to the construction of that canal is a tax upon the labor and the sweat of the people of this country. So I say, Mr. President, I would do whatever I could to limit the cost of that great enterprise.

There will be extortion there; there will be graft there. Under the most honest government there is bound to be more or less of it; but, Mr. President, all the extortion that can possibly be practiced in the building of the canal by the charging of extortionate prices is a mere bagatelle to the extortion that is practiced every day in every year upon all the people of the United States by the very same process.

I say it is no more unjust to take by extortionate prices the money of the taxpayer, after it has gone into the Treasury of the United States, than it is to take that money out of his own pocket.

Mr. President, I believe the time is coming, and that it will soon come, when the demand for the revision of our unjust tariff laws will be irresistible, and when the cry that the tariff shall be revised by its friends will be met by the counter demand that the taxpayer shall be taxed by his friends.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I send to the desk, and ask to have read, an amendment which I intend to propose to the joint resolution under consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator only wants to offer an amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a few remarks to make on the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, if it will not interfere with the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. All right. I will have the amendment read and will then defer my remarks until some other time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause, and to insert:

That the material, supplies, and machinery of all kinds for the construction of the Panama Canal shall be purchased at the cheapest price, conditions as to quality, prompt delivery, and responsibility of bidders being substantially the same: Provided, however, That in cases in which such material, supplies, or machinery are produced in the United States, and the conditions as to quality, prompt delivery, responsibility of bidders, and price are substantially the same as those respecting such articles as are offered by foreign bidders, the bids of citizens of the United States shall be given preference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, offered the following prayer:

We meet, O God, our Heavenly Father, under the shadow and gloom of death. Our hearts are profoundly moved with grief and sorrow. One who has gone in and out among us for years, and held a conspicuous place on the floor of this House, zealous in all that pertained to his duties, and sensitive as to his character, has rendered a good service to his people, to his State, and to the nation, and we mourn his loss. Comfort, we beseech Thee, his kindred, friends, and colleagues, and help us to copy all that was pure and noble in his life. And finally fit us all for the ordeal which awaits Thy children, that we may be ready when the summons comes to mount to a larger life and dwell with Thee and the angels on high. In the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the Journal be approved.

DEATH OF HON. ROBERT ADAMS, JR.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest feelings of pain and sorrow that I have to announce to the House the sudden death this morning of an old friend, the death of one of our Members, one of my colleagues from Philadelphia, a gentleman whose characteristics were such as to be admired and emulated, a gentleman whose personality was with us yesterday in the House, and whose conduct of the bill of which he had charge brought it to a successful passage in the late hours of the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House the sudden death in the early hours of the morning of ROBERT ADAMS, Jr., a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House, the Chair will read the following letter received this morning:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31, 1906.

Hon. J. G. CANNON.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The fact that my personal obligations exceed my resources is my only excuse for abandoning the responsible position I occupy in the House. I am willing to be buried at its expense, but I ask that no committee be appointed or memorial services be held, as I have never been in sympathy with the latter custom.

With assurance of my high regard, sincerely, yours,

ROBERT ADAMS.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROBERT ADAMS, Jr., a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for the funeral of the deceased, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the action of the committee upon the resolution referred to that committee to inquire into the right and title of REED SMOOT to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Utah, and to say that the committee reached a conclusion at its last meeting and authorized the chairman to report to the Senate that the senior Senator from Utah is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States. The committee directed the chairman to make a formal report, which will be done some time during the coming week.

An expression of opinion was had by the committee upon what steps would be necessary to take if the report of the committee was adopted by the Senate that the Senator from Utah is not entitled to a seat, and upon that there was a difference of opinion. The commitee were divided as to whether it would have to be followed by a resolution to expel the Senator from Utah or whether a declaration that he is not entitled to a seat would be sufficient. That will be a matter, however, for the Senate to determine.

I was also directed by the committee to say to the Senate that it is the desire of the committee to take up the matter at the earliest possible day and dispose of it during this session, and, if it would be agreeable to the Senate, to fix a day now when the matter could be taken up. Of course it is a privileged question, but it is not the desire of the committee to interfere with the necessary business of the Senate, and it was thought that perhaps the Senate might now consent to a day when it would be taken up. I would suggest a week from next Monday, if that would be agreeable to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the case be set down for a hearing a week from next Monday.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it was impossible to hear anything the Senator has said.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that this question may be taken up in the Senate a week from next Monday and disposed of.

Mr. BACON. I will have to say to the Senator again that we did not hear what preceded that. So I ask to what matter he refers.

Mr. BURROWS. I was reporting from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, by direction of the committee, in response to the resolution requiring the committee to inquire into the right and title of REED SMOOT to a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Utah. I stated that it had been passed upon by the committee, and the committee has determined that he has no right to a seat in the Senate; and the chairman of the committee was directed to make a written report to that effect to the Senate, which will be done some time next week.

It was also requested by the committee that I should ask the Senate to fix a date for the consideration of the matter, and I suggest, as the report may not be brought in until the middle of the week, that the matter be set down for the consideration of the Senate a week from next Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator add to his request for consent a disposition of the matter? I think in the motion directing the chairman to make the statement there was included a request that it should be disposed of, so that a vote on the substantial questions may be had in the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me suggest to my friend that it could be disposed of in many ways; so that would not be very effective. I think the main point is to have a time fixed for its consideration in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator gets his measure up, he will then, like every Senator who has charge of any matter, be at the disposition of the Senate as to what it will do afterwards.

Mr. BURROWS. Absolutely.

Mr. PATTERSON. We can not hear the Senator from Maine on this side.

Mr. HALE. I was suggesting that if the Senator gets his measure up on Monday week he will then be under the control of the Senate as to what he shall do, and I do not think it would be advisable to do any more than agree that it shall be taken up. Of course that, as we understand, does not interfere with appropriation bills and conference reports, which would naturally come in, or with the unfinished business. I do not see the Senator from South Dakota here looking out for his rights.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is here.

Mr. HALE. Of course it ought not to interfere with that.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course I agree with the Senator as to the suggestion of my friend from Indiana that the matter shall then be disposed of. There are many ways in which it can be disposed of. It is quite needless to make that request. I simply want to let the Senate know the desire of the committee that it shall be taken up for consideration a week from next Monday.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. We did not hear very well here. I should like to ask the chairman whether he has made a report in this case?

Mr. BURROWS. I stated that by direction of the committee I was authorized and directed to make this announcement, and I was also directed by the committee to report formally to the Senate. The report is being prepared and will be presented to the Senate next week, probably about the middle of the week.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see how the Senate can fix a time to consider a report that is yet in the hands of a committee. I do not think it is worth while for the Senator to ask the Senate to fix a time when we do not know what the report is. Every Senator will be entitled to some little time to consider that report.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator I am simply executing the command of my committee, and I leave it for the Senate. I suggested that date, and if there is any objection to it——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask if the testimony has been printed, so that Senators can get it?

Mr. BURROWS. It has.

Mr. TELLER. Has it been indexed, or is it in sheets?

Mr. BURROWS. It is indexed. If there is objection to the request, that ends it. It is a privileged matter. I can call it up.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that I will not object to fixing a time when the report comes in, but in my experience in the Senate I have never known a case set before the report was before the Senate, so that Senators might examine it. I shall object now to fixing a time. If the Senator will put in his report this morning so that we get the benefit of it, I shall not object.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator I have never known of such a case either, but I am carrying out the direction of my committee.

Mr. DICK. Before the chairman is through I wish to ask him a question. Can he inform the Senate as to the probable length of the report? Will it be a very lengthy report?

Mr. BURROWS. I can not yet say.

Mr. DICK. That might perhaps help us in fixing a time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, while it is clear there will be no consent to the request of the chairman, which he makes on behalf of the committee, upon motion unanimously adopted by the committee, for fixing a day to dispose of the matter at this session, the discussion has served a useful purpose, because I think it has indicated that all wish that the substantial subject itself shall be voted upon and concluded at this session.

I will state, in the absence of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who is my senior upon the committee and who entertains the views of everybody who voted against the exclusion or expulsion of Mr. SMOOT, that it is earnestly desired that the matter should be submitted to the Senate and determined at this session, and that based upon motion was concurred in by the entire committee.

So I think, Mr. President, that the request of the chairman of the committee has served the admirable purpose of revealing the sentiment of the Senate that the question itself shall be disposed of, voted upon, concluded before this session of Congress ends.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am utterly unable to discover any evidence, in this discussion of a few moments, of the desire or purpose of the Senate to dispose of the matter at this session. That may happen, but I rather inferred from the observations of the Senator from Colorado that he is possessed of the old-fashioned notion that he wants to know something about the matter and the views of the committee which for a couple of years has had it under consideration before he agrees to a time for taking it up. I have not heard any request as to the time for disposing of it or any expression from any Senator here as to the time of disposing of it. I suppose it is a matter of privilege, more or less.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would not the Senator be willing that it shall be voted upon at this session?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I must call for the regular order. I do not think we ought to anticipate the discussion on this matter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I claim the privilege of saying just a word.

I have no objection to taking up this case at a proper time, but I am under the impression that this is one of the kind of cases that the Senate is not in the habit of rushing through without a proper examination. For myself, I am not willing to fix a time now without knowing what the report is. I may know, in a general way, what the report is, but I want to know the ground upon which the report is based.

I should feel that I was derelict in my duty if I did not give this case attention. As far as I am concerned, I expect to consider it here, not upon the public clamor, but upon questions of right—constitutional right. I expect to act upon my oath. As I said on another occasion, a question of this kind is a question of conscience as well as of law, and we can not take up this case and dispose of it in fifteen or twenty minutes or in a day. The committee has taken testimony on it for two years, I understand.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TELLER. I propose, as far as I am concerned, if I am going to have a vote on it—and I expect to have it—to give some attention to it and consider it, and I hope every other Senator will.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I must call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BURROWS. Just one word.

Mr. HALE. Then somebody else will want a word.

Mr. BURROWS. I think not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reports of standing and select committees are in order.

Mr. CARTER. The bill has passed the Senate in another form, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. The bill has been read. It is identically the same as the bill which passed the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISTHMIAN EXPOSITION IN TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions:

Whereas it is fitting that the commencement of the work on the Panama Canal should be celebrated in a suitable manner by an exhibition of the resources, development, and progress of the United States, to the end that the importance of this great isthmian waterway may be accentuated and the sentiment in favor of its early completion fostered and kept alive; and

Whereas such an exhibition should be of a national character and should have the sanction of the United States Government; and

Whereas the city of Tampa, in the State of Florida, by reason of its being farther to the southward and nearer to said canal than any other city in the country having a deep and commodious harbor, reached by ample railroad facilities, as also on account of its salubrious climate and the spirit of American progress among its citizens, manifest in the rapid growth and development of the city and her commerce, affords a suitable place for such an exhibition; and

Whereas it has been determined to hold such an exposition there during the months of January, February, March, April, and May, A. D. 1908; and

Whereas his excellency Napoleon B. Broward, governor of the State of Florida, did on the 30th day of December, 1905, issue his proclamation calling an isthmian exposition to be held in the city of Tampa, commencing in the month of January, A. D. 1908, for the purpose aforesaid, and inviting the governors of the several States comprising the United States of America, as well as the governors of the Territories of the United States, to secure the cooperation of their State legislatures in aid of said exposition by participating therein and sending exhibits of their resources to said exposition: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to issue his proclamation to the governors of the several States, inviting them to participate in said exposition by sending exhibits thereto, showing their growth, development, and progress; and that the President be, and he is hereby, further requested to hold a naval review, at his discretion, in Tampa Bay at such time during the progress of said exposition as he may deem best.

Resolved further, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to cause to be made such display of the Army of the United States at said exposition as he may deem advisable.

Resolved further, That nothing contained in this concurrent resolution shall be construed as committing the United States to any obligation hereafter to appropriate money for expenses or expenditures or liabilities of any kind or character made or incurred by anyone for the entertainment of the guests of such exposition, or in connection with such celebration and exhibition.

PURCHASE OF MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 60.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 7 strike out the words "extortionate or."

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBBER. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read, at the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 of the joint resolution, before the word "unreasonable," strike out the words "extortionate or;" so that if amended the last clause will read:

Unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be unreasonable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (when Mr. HEMENWAY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HEMENWAY] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when Mr. PROCTOR's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PROCTOR] is necessarily absent to-day. He is paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I voted without observing the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], with whom I have a general pair. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], and let my vote stand.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. PETTUS. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McCREARY. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bulkeley	Foster	McLaurin	Warren
Burton	Gamble	Mallory

So Mr. MALLORY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the pending joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That in all the contracts for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal preference shall be given to articles of domestic production or manufacture, conditions of quality and price being equal.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Before the roll is called, I wish to make some inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

I discover that in the correspondence which accompanies the joint resolution, consisting of a letter from the Secretary of War and the President and some accompanying documents, the Secretary of War recommended a resolution that, in his opinion, would be sufficient to enable the President to act intelligently in the making of purchases of this kind. The joint resolution reported by the committee is in almost the exact language of the first part of the resolution that was recommended by the Secretary of War, except in the matter of the insertion of the words "or extortionate." The insertion of those words makes such a broad and unusual change in the language of the joint resolution that I think the chairman of the Committee on Finance should make some explanation of it to the Senate. The resolution as recommended by the Secretary of War is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture unless the President deems the bids therefor to be unreasonable.

In other words, if the President believes the bids to be unreasonable, then he is no longer restricted to domestic material or equipment. The amendment of the committee will require the President to confine himself in the purchase of material and equipment to the domestic article, unless the bids from outside of the United States should prove to be extortionate.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] shakes his head. I think that a little reflection will convince both him and the Senate that I am right. The words "or extortionate" were inserted before the word "unreasonable" for some purpose. If the Senator from Rhode Island will state the purpose in inserting the words "or extortionate," then we can judge what was in the mind of the committee when they recommended this amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator's inquiry is in the nature of a post-mortem examination. This matter was discussed yesterday, and the Senate has just voted upon the amendment which he is now discussing.

Mr. PATTERSON. There are other amendments upon which some light may be thrown by an understanding of the matter, to which I call the attention of the Senate and the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. The words "extortionate" and "unreasonable" in the joint resolution clearly refer to American bids or tenders and not to foreign bids or tenders.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken. I want to read the language of the resolution again:

That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate——

Mr. SPOONER. "Therefor."

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Therefor."

Mr. PATTERSON. But if he does not deem the bids for domestic articles to be extortionate then he must confine himself to domestic articles.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the idea?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know; but by inserting the words "extortionate or" before the word "unreasonable" they have enlarged the meaning of the word "unreasonable." In other words, though the bids for the domestic article might be unreasonable in the ordinary sense of the term, unless they are extortionate the President is confined to the domestic article.

Mr. ALDRICH. The language of the resolution, as the Senator will see, is "extortionate or unreasonable."

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, then, that is the point. Why were the words "extortionate or" inserted before the word "unreasonable?" I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the proposition. If the bid of the domestic manufacturer is unreasonable, would not that be sufficient to warrant the President in going to other markets for that which he wanted?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I may be lacking in comprehension. I suppose I am——

Mr. PATTERSON. No; not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. The President can reject bids that are either extortionate or unreasonable.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me propound my question again to the Senator from Rhode Island. If the President should deem the bid of those who are supplying the domestic article to be unreasonable, would not that be a sufficient justification for him to seek other vendors?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the bids were unreasonable or extortionate, that would be a sufficient reason for purchasing abroad.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the prices asked were unreasonable, why should the Senator insert, in addition to that, "or extortionate?"

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate has inserted those words. The committee recommended it, and the Senate acted on their recommendation and inserted those words.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is a purpose in it. The Senator from Rhode Island certainly had a purpose——

Mr. ALDRICH. We had a purpose.

Mr. PATTERSON. In inserting the words "extortionate or" before the word "unreasonable," the word "unreasonable" being the only word recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was for the purpose of enlarging the President's discretion, I will say to the Senator from Colorado; and that seems to be perfectly apparent on the face of the papers.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator, would the insertion of the word "and" suit the Senator any better, so as to read, "both extortionate and unreasonable?"

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I do not believe that the prices asked for the domestic article will go to the extent of being extortionate before the President would be justified or required to seek other markets.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator would it suit any better, if he seeks to make this point upon what the Senate has already decided, to put in the word "and?"

Mr. PATTERSON. No, Mr. President; that would make it worse.

Mr. HALE. I think it would make it better.

Mr. PATTERSON. Why is not the Senator from Maine satisfied with the proposition that the President shall be confined to domestic articles unless the price bid is unreasonable?

Mr. HALE. I am entirely satisfied with the decision of the Senate. It was fully debated, and this morning the Senate upon a yea-and-nay vote deliberately kept the word "extortionate" in. I am entirely content with that, but still I believe it would be better to use the word "and" instead of "or."

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no; the words I have been talking about are the words that ought to be out of the joint resolution altogether.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has just voted on that question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that. The only reason I make the inquiry is that we may have light upon other amendments that are to follow.

Mr. President, it seems to me that some such idea as this must have been in the minds of at least some members of the Finance Committee, that the President in making purchases for the Panama Canal should first consider the price of the article that he requires abroad; then that he should add to that price at least the tariff duty, and that the price abroad plus the tariff duty and plus a profit upon that should be regarded by the President as not extortionate, though he might believe it to be unreasonable.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I introduced an amendment to the pending joint resolution, and I undertook yesterday afternoon to address the Senate upon it, but yielded to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] for a motion to go into executive session. I had been sitting here this morning waiting for the joint resolution to come up, but was called out of the Chamber temporarily, and by the time I got back—I do not think I was absent more than ten minutes—I found my amendment had been voted down. I think it is proper that I should at least give some reason for the proposition, and while I do not care to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. PATTERSON. Not at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to state what my purpose was in offering the amendment. I do not think there is any question but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has struck the keynote of the point I was endeavoring to aim at by introducing the amendment. The two words "extortionate" and "unreasonable" are in the same category, but they do not mean the same thing. The word "extortionate" conveys a signification greater, broader, and much more obnoxious than the word "unreasonable." The word "extortionate" implies also, from its derivation—ex torquere—duress, force, a restraint imposed upon one who is subjected to the extortion. In other words, Mr. President, the word "extortionate," as used in connection with the word "unreasonable" there, simply implies a greater degree of unreasonableness. A thing or a proposition would not be extortionate without at the same time being unreasonable; but it might very well be unreasonable without being extortionate. Therefore it is equivalent to saying "that purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be superlatively unreasonable or unreasonable—unless it is exceptionally unreasonable or unreasonable," because I do not think that anyone would question the fact that an "extortionate bid" is not only unreasonable, but it conveys the obnoxious signification of also carrying with it duress, force, power, compelling the purchaser unwillingly to accept that which is unreasonable. Therefore, Mr. President, I think that one or the other of the two terms ought to go out—either the word "unreasonable" should be stricken out or the word "extortionate" should be stricken out, and that was my motive in offering the amendment.

I have no idea, of course, but that the joint resolution will prevail; but if it shall prevail, much against my will, I wish, at least, to see it in such shape as to compare favorably with other species of legislation. It should be accurate. Its expression should be positive, precise, and vigorous, and there should be no room whatever for an ambiguous construction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute for the joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. TELLER. Let it be again read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That in all contracts for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal preference shall be given to articles of domestic production or manufacture, conditions of quality and price being equal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I ask if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has voted, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Louisiana has not voted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a pair with that Senator; but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I thought he was in the Chamber, but have since learned that he has not voted. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 39, as follows:

So Mr. CARMACK'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I voted against striking out the word "extortionate." I do not myself think it makes any difference whether that word is in or out of the joint resolution. If the President finds that the price of a domestic article is unreasonable, under this resolution he has the right to purchase it abroad. If the price of the article is extortionate, it certainly is unreasonable. So there are two elements involved—one, if an article is extortionate, and the other, if it is unreasonable.

I am a member of the committee which reported this joint resolution. For a great many years—I will not say for all my life—I have been in favor of the protective system. I am still in favor of a protective system in this country. I know very well that any tariff that is levied properly on imports coming into the United States which will produce sufficient revenue to carry on this Government, will be a protective tariff; and the cry that we want a tariff for revenue only is, in my judgment, simply a play upon words.

Upon the dredges proposed to be purchased, as I understand, if bought in a foreign country and brought here, there would be paid a duty of 45 per cent upon their cash value. That, in my judgment, is an absolutely prohibitory tariff. I do not believe in prohibitory tariffs. I do not believe any tariff should be placed so high as to give the manufacturers of this country an opportunity to unduly tax the American citizen. I am one of those who believe that the present tariff would be greatly improved if it should be revised. If I want to buy a dredge, or if any of my constitutents want to buy a dredge, we are compelled to pay this tariff. I think it would be a very remarkable spectacle, Mr. President, for the Government of the United States to hold that what every one of its citizens must do, it will not do. I suppose in this case, perhaps, there will be no duty paid upon these dredges; I do not know; but heretofore I understand whenever the Government has imported anything for its public works, it has paid duty just as individuals have done.

At the present time we have a revenue in excess of our expenditures. I believe last month it was said that we had a revenue of about $2,500,000 more than our expenditures. When we shall have paid out the appropriations which we are now making, it will be discovered that there will be a deficiency. I figure that for the last year the real deficiency in the United States revenues was in the neighborhood of $70,000,000, although that is not the statement made from the Treasury Department, but that statement does not include all of these items.

If we are to adhere to the system of protection, or if we are to adhere to the system that has given us as much revenue as our expenditures—I do not care whether you call it a protective tariff or any other, for I am not able to distinguish the difference between a tariff for revenue which amounts to $500,000,000, or a tariff for protection which amounts to the same, so far as I am concerned—we have got to have about one-half of our revenues collected from our imports, or a little more, perhaps. There is not much difference whether a man pays his taxes in the shape of import duties or whether he pays them in the form of internal-revenue duties. It is about the same thing to him, for, in either case, he has got to earn the money with which to pay them.

I think, Mr. President, there is some advantage in having American mechanics construct these dredges. We have already spent upon the Panama Canal, I believe, about $70,000,000, and we are probably going to expend two hundred and fifty or three hundred million dollars more. Whether it is to be a lock canal or a sea-level canal does not make much difference. I am not a strong advocate of the canal, I admit. I have never voted for the canal. I expect the Government to build the canal because it has started it; but I do not expect, Mr. President, that there will be any material benefit to us from building it for a great many years, and perhaps never.

I saw recently in the newspapers that the chairman of the Canal Commission, Mr. Shonts, had made a speech somewhere, in New England or in New York—I have forgotten which—in which he insisted that we were in great haste to build the canal. He said we wanted it right away; immediately. It occurred to me if we did, it would be better for this man, getting $30,000 a year, to go down to the Isthmus and stay there and attend to the business. In the next newspaper that I took up——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I think the gentleman to whom the Senator refers not only did that, but while the Senate is deliberately considering the question of what the type of the canal shall be, and while that is a matter for Congressional action, the official to whom the Senator alludes argued but one side of the case, and in effect gave recommendations, if not instructions, to the Senate. While a grave question of that kind is pending in the Senate and in a matter of legislative discretion, I do not quite see—and I think the Senator will agree with me—that it is precisely the thing for an official connected with the Administration to suggest to or instruct the Senate what its course shall be.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have become rather used to that of late. I am not so much surprised at that as I would have been, perhaps, a few years ago. But I was going to say that in the next newspaper I took up was a statement of the same general character made by the chief engineer of the canal, who seemed to be in this country, too. There was a criticism in both cases of the Senate, and practically a direction as to what we ought to do as to the type of the canal. It was stated ex cathedra, as if there could not be any question about it, that we must have a lock canal.

If I get a little time next week, I think I may say something about the type of the Panama Canal. I do not care about going into it now. I only wanted to say that if we are to employ there 100 or 150 dredges, which, I understand, is part of the plan, there would be some advantage in having them built in the United States. It would furnish employment for American labor and it would give an opportunity for some of our manufacturers to engage in this work. There might be some advantage in that.

But I do not expect to see very much advantage in this canal when completed, although, as I have said, I noticed that Mr. Shonts was very much disturbed because we were losing so much now. We are carrying, Mr. President, about 10 per cent of our exports and imports in our own ships, and the only way we can make any money out of that canal directly will be by carrying ships through the canal. We may profit by it more if we increase our exports, but I do not think we will make much if we increase our imports, because I think they are large enough now for our benefit and happiness. The real profit will probably come from the passage of ships through the canal.

Mr. President, I think we can wait a little while for this canal. I am in no great haste about it. We have been waiting about four hundred years, and I think we might wait a few years longer—six, eight, or ten years.

As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said, I do not think it is quite becoming for a man who has been hired to build this canal to spend his time traveling around the country and directing the people what they ought to do, criticising the Congress for what it does not do, and telling us what should be the type of the canal.

For the reason that I thought we could get some benefit out of the passage of the pending joint resolution and as it was the only direct benefit which appears to me possible, I concluded that we had better build these machines at home and spend the money here. Then, I am under the impression that American mechanics will build a better dredge than will be built abroad. I think it can be demonstrated that such machinery is built better here than it is abroad.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That in making such purchases no price shall be paid "for articles of domestic production and manufacture" greater than the price for which such like American-produced articles can be bought in any foreign market.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two upon the amendment. The object of the joint resolution is to secure the purchase by the Government of articles purely of domestic manufacture and production. The amendment I have offered meets that end, but at the same time protects the Government by allowing it to pay for articles manufactured in this country the price that is paid for the same articles in foreign markets.

We have all been made familiar with the fact, by instances adduced here in the discussions upon the tariff and such questions, that the American manufacturer sells to his fellow-citizens very many articles, many of which will be used by the Government in the construction of the Panama Canal in very large quantities and at great cost, at prices which very far exceed what he offers the same thing to the foreign market after the marine insurance, the risk, the interest on time drafts, etc., are counted in.

We know that the manufacturers of agricultural implements and carpenters and blacksmith's tools are selling their products in South America at a very much cheaper rate than they are sold for in this country. The same may be said of the Australian Confederacy, South Africa, and New Zealand. I have myself had catalogues of the manufacturers in Spanish and in English, showing a difference in exactly the same products. We are all familiar with the fact that American railroad rails, many of which are to be used on the Isthmus, are selling to-day abroad about $7 a ton cheaper than they are at home. I have been told that a great many other things necessary for work on the canal are sold abroad cheaper than they are at home to the American citizen, and, of course, to the American Government.

The amendment I have offered will give the say in everything needed in the construction of the canal to the American producer or manufacturer, but, at the same time, it will protect the Government from any unreasonable prices. I do not see what objection can be raised to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That in making such purchases no price shall be paid "for articles of domestic production and manufacture" greater than the price for which such like American-produced articles can be bought in any foreign market.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I submitted to the Senate an amendment yesterday, which I gave notice I would offer at the proper time. I ask now that it may be read, in order that the Senator from Mississippi may see whether he will let it be substituted for his amendment. It is a little more elaborate than his, but contains the same idea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Georgia the Secretary will read the amendment intended to be proposed by him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask what became of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is pending. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] requested the reading of his proposed amendment to see if the Senator from Mississippi would accept it as a substitute for his amendment.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Georgia is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not see him in the Chamber, although I think he is in the building. In his absence I will not vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE.] If I had a right to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am informed that the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] is not present. I have a standing pair with that Senator. I voted on the first two votes on the amendments to this measure in ignorance of the fact that he was not here voting. However, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ALLEE], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY. Before the vote is announced, I wish to say in behalf of my colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN] that if present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment, as he would on the several preceding ones.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bacon	Dubois	Martin	Taliaferro
Bailey	Frazier	Overman	Teller
Carmack	La Follette	Patterson	Tillman

So Mr. MONEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I now offer the amendment which I previously sent to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following proviso at the end of the joint resolution:

Provided, That in making said purchases a larger price shall not be paid for any such article of domestic production or manufacture than the price at which the same or similar articles of domestic production or manufacture are sold or offered for sale in foreign markets or for export to foreign countries; and for the ascertainment of the prices at which articles are sold or offered for sale in foreign countries the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to procure, so far as practicable, and to report to the President the following information:

First. What articles and classes of goods produced or manufactured in the United States such as are required as material and equipment in the construction of the Panama Canal have during the year ending December 31, 1905, been sold or offered for sale in foreign countries or for export to foreign countries by the producers or manufacturers thereof, or through their representatives or agents, at prices less than the same and similar articles and classes of goods were during the same period sold in the United States by the producers or manufacturers thereof, or through their representatives or agents, having special reference in said report to all classes of tools, machinery, steel rails, cars, engines, dredges, vehicles, cement, and other material largely and principally required in the construction of said canal and in the maintenance, equipment, and operation of the Panama Railroad.

Second. What, separately stated as to each class of goods and with specification of articles so far as practicable, was the general average during the said period of the comparative prices in sales in the United States and in the several foreign countries.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is further directed to make said reports as soon as practicable, and thereafter in the year 1907 and in each succeeding year during the continuance of the construction of said canal it shall be his duty to procure the said information and to report to the President concerning said sales in the United States and in foreign countries during the calendar year next preceding the said report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had not anticipated that the vote would be taken upon the joint resolution to-day. It had been my purpose to prepare some figures to submit in support of the amendment. I am not able to do so, however, except in a very general way for the reason I have stated, that the joint resolution has come up for action earlier than I anticipated.

There are some general matters in the way of figures, however, which I will submit to the Senate in order that it may be seen what is the price which it is proposed shall be paid for material in the construction of the canal over and above the necessary price, and which increased cost would be, in a degree at least, saved to the people of the United States if the President in making the purchases of material for the canal should be governed by the terms of the amendment.

It is all very well, Mr. President, to content ourselves with generalities. It is all very well to claim the results which flow from the labor of the agricultural element of this country, and which in the main receives no protection, as the fruit of the protective tariff, and to point to the prosperity of the country, which in so large a measure is due to the labor of this large industrial element in our country, and to claim the fruit of that as the result of this particular system. But, Mr. President, when we come to consider practically and in the concrete what is paid by persons who may not be receiving any particular benefit from this system, it may arrest the attention of the people and cause them to think. We are told that the canal is to cost, if the sea-level plan is adopted, $250,000,000 in round numbers. I have no doubt it will cost more than $250,000,000, whether it is a sea level or a lock canal.

I have taken the pains to make inquiry of those connected with the business of the construction of the canal to ascertain what proportion of that expense will be represented in expenditures for material, including machinery, tools, etc., which will be used in the construction of the canal. From the information thus secured I learn that the proportion of the expense which is to be incurred on account of the matters referred to by the joint resolution—and my information comes from a source which can not be questioned—for material, etc., of this character will be from 25 to 30 per cent of the entire cost. For the purpose of this argument I will take the higher for the purpose of calculation, or, rather, of estimate, because I do not propose to make any very directly accurate calculation. If 30 per cent of the entire cost of the canal is to be represented in material to be purchased, then we may say, in round numbers, that the cost of this material, including tools, machinery, etc., will be $80,000,000. How much of that will be saved if the amendment offered by me is adopted and if the President of the United States, in the making of these purchases, is controlled thereby?

Speaking only generally, I presume it will be recognized that the general average of duties under the Dingley law, as I understand, is between 40 and 50 per cent. It is generally stated at 50 per cent, though possibly it may be a little under that, and while upon some of the particular articles which will be used in the construction of the canal the duty may be less, many of those articles are among those which are of the highest class in the protected list. If we say the average increased cost of these articles will be only 40 per cent by reason of the tariff, upon the basis of $80,000,000 there would be over $30,000,000 more expended in the purchase of material for the construction of the canal if bought here than if bought in foreign markets. But the purpose of my amendment is not to require this material to be bought in foreign markets, but simply that when bought at home it shall be sold to us as cheaply as it is sold to foreign consumers.

Mr. President, it is a notorious fact, one not now disputed, that very largely the manufacturers and producers in this country sell their goods in foreign markets at a figure below the price charged to domestic consumers in the United States. Some two years ago I had occasion to address the Senate upon this subject, and I then presented figures from which it was shown that the range of prices of manufactured articles sold to domestic consumers in this country was from 25 to 100 per cent more than the manufacturers of such articles sold them for in foreign countries. I had occasion particularly to call attention to the matter of steel rails, upon which the duty in this country is in the neighborhood of 40 per cent. The duty not being stated ad valorem, of course the ratio of duty fluctuates with the price. But with the present prices, or as they were then, the duty upon steel rails was in the neighborhood of 40 per cent; and the same thing may be said of other material which enters into the construction of the canal.

At that time the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was present, and having every opportunity to contradict the correctness of the statements not only then, but since, did not challenge or contradict them, and I presume he will not do so now.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a very violent presumption on the part of the Senator from Georgia that I assent to every statement made upon this floor on the tariff question if I do not in terms dispute it.

Mr. BACON. I want to state to the Senator that on that occasion I had two letters read to the Senate, and that the Senator from Rhode Island then stated that they recited transactions such as were constantly being had. It was upon the basis of that statement, which I hold in my hand, that I made the assertion just made, that the Senator from Rhode Island did not then contradict it, but on the contrary assented to it.

In order that the matter stated in these letters may be in direct opposition to what I am stating, I ask that they be again read in the hearing of the Senate. I will send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the two letters marked, one on page 16 and extending to page 17, and the other on page 19.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to make a request about another matter?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

PROPOSED ISLE OF PINES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I find that my right or privilege of discussing further the resolution relating to the Isle of Pines which was up yesterday for consideration will be exhausted before the regular business is called. I ask that the resolution which was before the Senate yesterday be laid over until Monday, with the same privilege of taking it from the table that I now have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PURCHASE OF MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. BACON. I will state that these letters were addressed to me personally, and the writers of them are to me personally known, and the accuracy of their statements can be most thoroughly and confidently vouched for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia requests the reading of two letters. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MACON, GA., February 23, 1904.

HON. A. O. BACON, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to own receipt of yours of the 20th, and have carefully noted same.

I recall very distinctly my conversation with you on the subject of steel rails purchased by my company from the ——— company, and I take pleasure in giving you the details of the transaction, asking you, however, to refrain from mentioning the names of the parties.

The extension of our road, some 40 miles, was decided upon and cash provided for it early in the spring of 1901. Owing to the demand at that time for steel in all forms and the probability of an advance in price, it seemed wise to take up the matter of the purchase of the necessary rails at once. Inquiries, therefore, were addressed and mailed to all the leading steel-rail manufacturers in the country, asking for tenders on 60 miles of 70-pound steel rail delivered at Savannah or Macon, the point of delivery to be optional with us.

We received prompt responses, but there was practically no difference in the bids, the eastern rail mills contiguous to tide water quoting practically the same price delivered at Savannah and a correspondingly higher price for Macon delivery, the interior rail mills making a lower price for Macon delivery and a higher price for Savannah delivery. It was very evident to me that the field had been divided by the manufacturers and that no one of them would encroach upon the territory assigned to the others.

After endeavoring in vain to obtain better prices than those quoted, we finally accepted the bid of the ——— Steel Company, and placed our order with them for 5,618 tons of rail at $29 per ton, based upon delivery at tide water. This would enable us to arrange our own freight rate to Savannah and effect some saving in the cost of the rails. The order was declined on these terms, the ——— Steel Company refusing to make any price f. o. b. mill, but insisting upon delivered price.

The matter was then taken up with interior mills, who were perfectly willing to make a price f. o. b. mill, but we were unable to obtain any concession in all-rail rates which would reduce the cost of the rail below that quoted by the ——— Steel Company for delivery at Savannah.

The whole transaction in the meantime had been handled by wire, owing to the demands of the ——— Steel Company that it be closed at once, as the price would be advanced.

I made one more effort. Some friends of mine were interested in a railroad project in Central America, and I broached the subject to the representative of the ——— Steel Company who had come here to close the matter with me. I told him that my friends had made some inquiry of me as to the cost of construction in that country, and I should like to know at what price he would sell me steel rails delivered at tide water for shipment to Honduras. He promptly quoted me $20 per ton. Further inquiry developed the fact, however, that they would only load vessels chartered to a foreign port and that the charter should be an essential part of the contract. The wall was complete. There was nothing left for me to do but to place my order and to thank God it was no worse, as within two days thereafter steel rails advanced $2 per ton.

Allowing a liberal amount for cost of delivery at tide water, which in this particular case would have been very small, we American citizens paid to this American industry $33,000 in excess of what foreigners would have been compelled to pay. And $33,000 would have put up a very handsome library filled with standard books on protection.

And this was a very small transaction—only 50 miles of railroad! Payments were cash, and we neither needed nor asked any concessions in the matter of time. Because we were Americans, interested in the development of a small section of our country, involving faith and sacrifices, we were compelled to pay out as a bonus in excess of $600 per mile.

These are the facts. Unfortunately I had only the verbal quotation on the rails for foreign shipment, but I have no doubt that it was at least the top of the market, but I have the full correspondence in my files covering the rest of the transaction.

Owing to the necessity for prompt action, I was unable to secure prices from foreign rail makers, but it would be foolish to imagine that that avenue had not also been closed to us.

I have written you hurriedly, and may not have given you all the facts or as clearly as you desire. If there is still opportunity and I can further elucidate the matter, please advise me, and I shall take pleasure in doing so.

For purely business reasons I must ask you not to mention the names I have given. Personally I should like to see it given the widest publicity; and if the statement is of any use to you, I shall be glad, as an American and as a Republican.

Very truly, yours, J. T. WRIGHT.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say, with reference to the blanks in the letter, that, in accordance with the request of the writer, who, by the way, is from the State of Indiana, I have omitted the names; but I can furnish the names omitted to any Senator who desires to know them. I have omitted them from this reading in deference to the request of the writer, which he stated was for business reasons solely.

I will now ask the Secretary to read the next letter, which is from a gentleman who was then the president of the Mexican National Railroad, a railroad lying partly in Texas and partly in Mexico. That letter was addressed to me also. The caption is left off there.

The Secretary read as follows:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 20th. It would not be any embarrassment for me to give you the information you ask if it were possible for me to do so, but I believe it will not be practicable. I am so overwhelmed with work preparatory to getting my affairs in shape for leaving my present position with the company that I have no time to devote to anything outside of my official work, and to get any accurate information would require going back into the files of the purchasing agent's office, and the man who is familiar with this whole business is leaving for Mexico City to-day.

For a long time past all our purchases have been made on the basis of export prices, even though they have occasionally stopped in Texas, the competition being keen enough to produce this cut in prices in favor of the Texas shipments, so that it has been some time past since we have had any material differences, but those differences do exist and to an iniquitous extent. I use the word "iniquitous" because it certainly seems so to me when the citizens of the United States are required under the laws of the country to pay a higher price to the manufacturers than these same manufacturers are willing to make and sell to foreign people for. In 1902 I secured bids on steel rails for Mexico from United States mills at about $24 delivered at Tampico, while the price I paid at the same time for rail for our road in Texas was $28 at the mills.

I have understood that the Canadian Pacific has just bought a large lot of rails from the United States Steel Corporation at $21. It is asserted and denied that the $21 is for delivery at Montreal. If it is, the price at the mill would be about $19, while the price for United States roads is still $28 at the mills. I do not know this of my own knowledge, and it is merely current report.

When I saw that you had introduced a bill in Congress to inquire into these differences in prices, I was very much pleased that you had started the inquiry, and intended to write you a line expressing myself in that sense, but I was interrupted by one thing and another, and finally it escaped me. The source from which you are seeking to get this information will be official and thoroughly authentic, and it seems to me it should supply you with material quite sufficient to establish your case.

* * * * * * *

With kind regards, I remain, yours, very truly,

W. G. RAOUL.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. One moment, if the Senator will pardon me, and then I will yield to him.

I want to call attention to the fact, the pertinent fact, disclosed in that letter. There is a railroad which, as I stated before, runs partly in Texas and partly in Mexico, and the statement made by the president of the road, for whose credibility I entirely vouch, a man beyond possibility of suspicion, to the contrary is that upon that part of his railroad in Texas he was charged $28 at the mill for rails; that from the same company, at the same time, he was priced rails and furnished rails at $24, delivered at Tampico. Allowing $4 for freight, which is not unreasonable, and which I presume was about the freight, there was a difference of $8 between the price charged by the same mill at the same time to the same consumer for rails for the same railroad, part of it lying in Texas and part of it lying in Mexico—$28 for the rails to be used on the part of the road lying in Texas and $20 for the rails to be used on the part of the road lying in Mexico.

The particular pertinency of this particular instance at this time is this: This relates to a class of purchases which will have to be made in the construction of the canal, for the maintenance and operation of the Panama Railroad is an important part of the expense in the construction of the canal. And, therefore, this transaction, which relates to shipments in that particular part of the world, reveals to us this condition of affairs: If the United States Government buys rails for the operation of the Panama Railroad pending the construction of the canal at prices charged in this country for rails, it will pay $28 a ton, if the prices are now the same as they were then, while at the same time any other party, this particular railroad, the Mexican National Railroad, for instance, desiring to purchase rails for use in Mexico, in that immediate part of the world, will secure them at $20 a ton, speaking in round numbers.

Now, what is true with reference to rails is in a greater or less degree true as to all other articles which will enter into the construction of this railroad which will have to be purchased and carried there to be thus utilized, including material, tools, machinery, etc. It is an easy matter of general computation, not, of course, accurate without going into details, that the country is to be saddled with an increased cost of the construction of this canal of many millions of dollars, when it is perfectly competent for other parties to buy from the same producers in foreign countries the same articles at many million dollars—I have estimated it at over $30,000,000—less than the Government will pay for those articles in this country, if it pays the ordinary prices charged in this country for those articles.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a well-known fact, about which there is no dispute, that producers in the United States and in every one of the great industrial nations sell portions of their products from time to time at a less price to people of other countries than to their regular customers at home. This fact, which is well known to the people of the United States, has in no sense affected their decision as to what the policy of the country ought to be with reference to the tariff.

Mr. BACON. The suggestion of the Senator is, I presume, intended to produce the impression that the sale of products by American manufacturers in foreign countries at less prices than those products are sold in this country is not a general thing, but exceptional.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not exceptional; it goes on all the time all over the world. It is not exceptional in the United States; it is not exceptional in Great Britain, which has a free-trade policy; it is not exceptional in any industrial country in the world.

Mr. BACON. I will accept the broad statement of the Senator, then, that it is not exceptional, that it is a part of the regular business of the manufacturers of this country to sell their products in foreign countries to foreigners cheaper than they sell to our own domestic consumers.

Mr. ALDRICH. While the Senator, I have no doubt, intends to be fair, he puts a different construction entirely upon my statement from what can be fairly given to it. I made no such statement as that which the Senator is now alluding to, and I should like to say one other thing in regard to it.

Mr. BACON. It is difficult for me to hear the Senator, on account of conversation in the Chamber. I hope the Senator will repeat his statement. I did not hear it clearly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has gone into the question of the cost hypothetically of this resolution, if adopted, to the people of the United States. I have heretofore heard that Senator, and I have heard other Senators, undertake to show——

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator was going to repeat what he said just now and was not going to answer the argument generally.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to make another statement in reference——

Mr. BACON. I am sorry I missed the other.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the other had been answered sufficiently. I repeat, I have heard the Senator from Georgia and other Senators on this floor and other people elsewhere undertake to enter into a definite calculation in dollars of how much the protective policy costs the people of the United States in increased prices, the cost thus estimated running into thousands of millions of dollars. Now, if it is only a question of $32,000,000 in this case, based upon a pure hypothetical statement, without any foundation other than that——

Mr. BACON. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a very small amount to be added to the thousands of millions which, in his opinion, the protective system costs the people of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon, I am not basing it upon a hypothetical suggestion without——

Mr. ALDRICH. He is basing it——

Mr. BACON. I listened to the Senator with perfect quiet, and I hope he will allow me to reply. The Senator says that my statement was based upon a hypothesis without any foundation. My statements have been based upon a well-recognized estimate of the cost of the canal. We all agree that for the minimum cost the estimate is $247,000,000; stated in round numbers, $250,000,000. I have no doubt that is the minimum and that it will cost a great deal more than that. That is one fact which is not a hypothesis without a foundation.

Another was the statement which I made from the high officials of this canal, those in charge of the construction of the canal. I have had an estimate that the material which is to be bought and carried there to be used in the construction, including tools, machinery, etc., will cost from 25 to 30 per cent of that amount. That certainly is not a hypothesis without a foundation.

Then, Mr. President, the other important factor which enters into the estimate is the amount of tariff which we have imposed upon articles like those articles of domestic manufacture by the Dingley tariff act. I presume the Senator will agree that my statement was not inaccurate, that the general average of those duties is between 45 and 50 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator if he will let me finish the sentence. Therefore, I say that those are statements well based and do not constitute a hypothetical statement without foundation, as stated by the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. The first two statements are more or less hypothetical. The last one is absolutely imaginary.

Now, it is not a question of amount of difference in tariff rates, but a difference in the cost of purchase. The question is how much more it would cost the Government of the United States to buy this $80,000,000 of material in the United States than it would if bought of foreign producers.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have a concrete case before us, where the difference, according to the report of the Secretary of War, is but 8 per cent. Why does the Senator say 40 per cent? Why does he imagine 40 per cent? Why does he base any hypothesis of the cost of the canal upon 40 per cent additional when the only concrete case we have gives a difference of but 8 per cent?

Mr. BACON. By no means. I have given the Senator another concrete case where the difference is 40 per cent, and I will repeat it in order that the very emphatic statement of the Senator from Rhode Island may not be considered as an utter refutation of what I said. I give an instance of one particular article that will have to be used in large amounts—the article of steel rails.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator ought to know, if he is familiar with this subject, that the Government has been buying steel rails of domestic producers at much less than the price charged domestic purchasers, and at the foreign price.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking about what the Government has done.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator undertook to show what the practical effect of purchasing articles of domestic production would be upon the Treasury of the United States, and he has given two concrete examples, one where the difference is but 8 per cent and the other where there is a difference of even less than that.

Mr. BACON. I take issue with the Senator. I say that in the concrete instance of steel rails the difference is one of 40 per cent

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator in proper order, but I can not consent that the Senator shall interrupt me and be heard by me with perfect patience, and that then when I seek to reply the Senator shall prevent such reply.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. The Senator should permit me to finish my statement. I will certainly yield to the Senator now and at all other times in a proper way, and I will be very glad to have the Senator to reply, but he must certainly give me an opportunity to say something in reply to the statement which he makes that no concrete instance is furnished.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia now yield?

Mr. BACON. No; not now. I have not yet made the statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator at the proper time.

I say, Mr. President, that steel rails, which must enter largely into the expense of the construction of the canal, furnish a concrete instance where, if the Government pays the price charged in this country for rails, it will pay 40 per cent more than the same manufacturers of rails charge other people in foreign countries. Now, that is the statement I make, and I proceed to prove it.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. Wait a moment, if you please. I prove it in this way: I have had read from the desk two statements of two distinct transactions, where it is shown that the manufacturers of steel rails charged approximately either a little more or a little less than 40 per cent more to the consumers of domestic rails in this country than the same manufacturers charged to the consumers of the same rails in a foreign country.

Now, the Senator replies that I ought to know that the Government has bought rails from domestic manufacturers at a less price than it sells on the market to domestic consumers. That may be true as a fact as to what has been done, but that does not alter the proposition that if the Government of the United States pays the same price for rails that domestic consumers pay it will be paying more by 40 per cent than is charged by the same manufacturers to the foreign consumers of the same rails, and my amendment simply seeks to prevent that.

The amendment seeks simply to accomplish this: That if the manufacturer of rails sells to people in Mexico rails at $20 a ton, the United States Government shall not pay to the manufacturers of those same rails $28 a ton, to go into the same part of the world, to be laid on the Panama Railroad.

This is all this proposition means. There is a concrete instance. I said in the beginning that I did not have the details as to all the material to be purchased. The Senator from Rhode Island has them in his head, without the necessity of sitting down to figure them out, as I would have to do, because that is his particular specialty. Let the Senator take, if he will, each of the articles that will enter into the construction of the Panama Canal and show what is the amount of duty upon each and the cost of them as sold in the United States, and then let him furnish us with the information which this amendment of mine seeks to obtain, as to how much less than that the manufacturer of this same article sells those articles to foreign consumers. Then when the Senator does that the Senator will not have to stand and make a general denial. He will confound me by the proof of particular and detailed instances.

But in the absence of that I furnish one instance where the facts are known to me, and the statement can not be refuted. That it is equally true as to other articles is not to be doubted. It may be, as stated by the Senator, that the Government in a particular instance has bought rails for less. This amendment seeks simply to impose upon the Government the obligation to do in the future what the Senator says it has done in the past, to wit, to buy at the prices which the same manufacturers charge to foreign consumers.

Now, I will hear the Senator if he desires to interrupt me.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has answered my question in his last statement.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Now, Mr. President, I think it is proper that this amendment should be adopted. Why should Senators in favor of the protective tariff object to this amendment? It may be true, as the Senator says, that other countries do the same thing, that they sell to foreign consumers at less prices than they sell to domestic consumers. It may be true, and it is true, in this country that manufacturers sell to foreign consumers for less prices than they sell to domestic consumers. Does that furnish any reason why we, engaged in an enterprise in the construction of this important world work, should not have the benefit of prices in that foreign country that the same manufacturer will sell to foreigners in the adjoining country? I am instancing steel rails simply because I have the figures on that particular article. If they are willing to sell to foreigners in Mexico rails at $20 a ton, is there any hardship, is there anything in conflict with the doctrines of the protective tariff, to say to them that in this particular work, where the Government is engaged in the construction of a canal which shall be a tax upon every man, woman, and child of this country, that when the people of this country put their hands in their pockets for the purpose of taking the money out to build this canal they shall not be required to produce more money for the material used in the construction of that canal than foreigners in the adjoining country are required to produce when they get the same articles in the United States from the same manufacturers?

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to make some observations on the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the consideration of joint resolution No. 60 be continued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia demands the yeas and nays upon the amendment which he has offered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Alabama rise to the pending amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. Has the regular order gone over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order has gone over.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the younger members of the Senate, it appears, during this discussion upon what they seem to consider a very trifling, small matter connected with the canal, seem to have absented themselves from the body and left a few old men in charge. I suppose they are taking their recreation in the hope that the Senate will do what it has been doing ever since this canal project started—slight over every question that comes along, giving it the shortest possible consideration, and refusing to listen to those matters which are of real importance in regard to the construction of this great work.

As a member of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, with which I have been connected from its origin, I have not only had occasion, but I have felt it to be my most unavoidable duty to try to look into every fact connected with this great subject that might affect the interests and welfare of the people of the United States.

So far as the little political tricks that may be wrapped up in this affair, or the small peculations which might arise out of it, or the temporary scandals circulated about it through the country, I have no serious concern, for I understand that this great work is to outlive Presidential terms. It is to outlive political organizations and their domination. It is to outlive the scandalmongers. It is to outlive all of the feeble and inept and unnecessary criticisms that are made upon the operations of this great work. Viewing it in that way, I have been trying to seek for principles of action connected with the government of the canal, but more particularly connected with the question of the financing and the construction of the canal that would stand and would challenge the tests of time as to their wisdom.

Mr. President, we can not control this canal at all within the bounds of any reasonable expenditure, nor can we control its operations so as to gratify a sound public sentiment, unless we ascertain first of all what we have got to do, and the best methods of doing that thing, and the best places at which to perform these operations, so we will have a guide that the Senate or the Congress of the United States has had something to do in preparing. As matters have stood for the last two years, it has been strictly a hand-to-mouth business. A suggestion will be made or a line of action taken by the President of the United States, under the vast and unqualified powers, as is alleged—I do not admit it—that have been conferred upon him; and whenever he gets into a difficulty or makes a mistake a sudden and hasty and impetuous resort is made to the Congress of the United States to cure up the difficulty and give him a new start. So it has been in regard to purchasing supplies of different kinds.

There is no subject connected with this great matter in which the people of the United States have such an intimate and such a necessary and important connection as with the purchase of supplies. The supplies for this canal of every kind, or nearly every kind, have been expected, naturally and properly, to be produced in the United States, and I do not know anybody who objects to that proposition, provided it can be done in a rational, permanent, and proper way.

The transportation of supplies also has a great deal to do with this work, and it ought to be under a system of regulation that is intelligent and correct. The studies that the Senate of the United States ought now to bestow upon this question are profound. The action that it should take in every proposition that is presented here of any importance should be rational and consistent, and in support of the general proposition that the canal is to be constructed in the shortest time practicable, and at the lowest cost, and with a view also of its permanent usefulness to the United States and to the world.

The committee of which I have the honor to be a member has since last December spent its time most diligently and studiously in collecting facts from the highest possible sources of testimony, official and unofficial, and recording them in reports, which, I now believe, amount to four volumes of five or six hundred pages each. I do not believe, Mr. President, that an irrelevant matter has been considered in that committee room. I do not believe that any question which came in the reach of the committee that bore importantly upon the great questions we have been dealing with has been neglected or overslaughed.

Among other things that we have had to deal with was the very important matter of the purchase of supplies. In Senate Document No. 261, by the direction of the committee, there was compiled and I had printed here a "list of contracts, aggregating 1,000 or more, entered into by the Isthmian Canal Commission as the result of advertising for proposals February 1, 1905, to October 31, 1905, inclusive." The committee has gone further and has investigated to a later date, but the accounts and records were not made up in such a form as that we could present them with completeness of detail.

In the paper that I have presented, that I refer to here, if Senators choose to consider this question at all they will find the exact date respecting every purchase that has been made by the Government of the United States, on whose order made, from what firm or party made, and the price of each class of articles that has been purchased. Senators could get there information that would enable them without any difficulty at all to regulate by law the method of making purchases.

Can anyone conceive a more important law to regulate this business than that which controls the method of making purchases? I can not, and I do not think any other Senator can.

There are some facts which have come out in evidence in regard particularly to the subject of cement that I do not find in this list, and I suppose that the purchases of cement have taken place either before the date of this list or subsequent thereto. I do not recall exactly the date. The facts are in the record, and I refer to them for the information of the Senate.

Cement is one of the leading articles which enter into the construction of any canal that we may build there, whether a sea-level or a lock canal. It is one of the most costly articles, an article in which there is to be the greatest possible skill and diligence and care in its preparation and in the testing of it, an article which, if it is slighted in examination in any particular, leads to disastrous results in any structure that we make there, such as the great locks of the canal, the great dam at Gamboa—I was about to say the great dam at Gatun, but that is to be built out of earth, not out of cement. In many other structures on all the plans that have been submitted to Congress cement is one of the most important of all those articles—important in its cost, important in the character of material, which is affected by various conditions which, of course, I will not undertake now to describe to the Senate, but which are fully described by scientific men in the hearings before the Senate committee.

A man who wants to understand the subject of Portland cement can go to these hearings and obtain information from the best and most valuable sources in the world of a scientific character. The Isthmian Canal Commission have heretofore purchased their cement very largely in foreign markets, and they brought that material across the ocean, subjecting it to the danger of being saturated with moisture, with water, before it could be delivered for use on the Isthmus.

The inducement for purchasing that cement was not the want of capacity of the cement producers in the United States to furnish an abundant supply. It is very true that the demands for cement have increased with astonishing rapidity, and the production, which ten years ago did not exceed, perhaps, 1,000 barrels in the United States, is now 36,000,000 barrels within the period of about ten years, involving an amount of capital and labor that is astonishing and greatly profitable.

Notwithstanding the great local demand which has thus increased the production of this great essential material of structural work, these companies in the United States have been all the time ready and prepared to deliver to the Isthmian Canal Commission all of the cement that they want, to be shipped on short lines, as, for instance—if they had ever condescended to notice such a subject—from New Orleans to Colon, instead of from New York to Colon, and not be exposed to the atmospheric conditions that very frequently destroy its value. They have been prepared all the time to supply this demand, and when they saw that the Government of the United States was going to England and Germany and buying cement they rallied to this committee and wanted a hearing. They demanded it, and they got it. They presented the facts upon the record, which show that the Government of the United States had gone to England to buy cement for the sole purpose of getting an article at a lower price. When this body of highly intelligent, able, and wealthy gentlemen appeared before the committee a change took place in the views of the Isthmian Canal Commission—I will not say of the President. I must not assert that the President can change.

What was that change? It was that we have got to abandon this idea of buying cement and dredges on bids from foreign people, or else we have got to trick up some arrangement of legislation by which the President can, at his option, buy cement and dredges and the like of that from foreign countries in preference to American manufacturers if he finds the bids that are put in by American manufacturers are extortionate or unreasonable.

This is a left-handed compliment to our protected manufacturers, when the Senator of Rhode Island states in his resolution that they might, by any possibility, be either unreasonable or extortionate toward an indulgent, parental Government. He knows them. They are the spirit of his political life.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to state to my friend from Alabama the fact in reference to the purchase of cement in Arizona. The Government advertised some time since for large quantities of cement in Arizona for the purpose of building one of the restraining dams there. There was a trust or combination on that article, and the prices were so high that the Government, after investigation, decided to manufacture the cement itself in Arizona; which it is now doing at a saving to the Government of fully 50 per cent of what the combination charged. Why should not the Government do the same in this instance?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in order to try to facilitate the construction of this canal, which I do not believe you will ever build at Panama—I do not believe it, yet I intend as long as I can stand in this Senate to vote for it just as earnestly and work for it just as hard as if I did believe it would be a success, and I have always done so—in order to ascertain whether or not the indurated clay that is piled up in great banks against the coastal borders of Panama, and upon which they want to put that dam, which you see there on that long red map hanging on the wall of this Chamber, which is called the Gatun dam, I wanted to see whether that indurated clay might not be useful as a material for producing Portland cement. By various petitionings and the kindness of one of the Canal Commissioners I had specimens sent up from borings from that dam and from the Culebra Heights also. They were submitted to the chemists of the Geological Survey of the United States, and they have returned their analyses, which I have here now. I have specimens of the borings in my locker in the retiring room of the Senate. These analyses show that that material at Gatun has no value whatever for the purpose of producing Portland cement. I wanted, if possible, to locate the cement factory at the dam, in order to make the cement right there. None of these savants, none of these great, highly educated gentlemen, who have been educated, it seems to me, out of all the practical common sense they ever had, thought about trying to see what that material was. They contented themselves with calling it "indurated clay," a thing that does not exist as a geological structure or formation anywhere in the world, I am told. It turns out now that Portland cement could not be manufactured on the Isthmus. That question has departed and is closed. We must then rely upon the United States market for cement, or upon the European market, or upon both. European cement travels four or five thousand miles by sea, exposed to all the danger of destruction by dampness that may be infused into it, and the other on short lines of haul, to be carried from New York, if you please, or, if you want it 800 or a thousand miles nearer, from New Orleans, or from the coast of the Pacific, because they have good cement material on the coast of the Pacific.

Mr. PERKINS. We are making it there.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; there is good cement material there. The Isthmian Canal Commission ran along very smoothly in buying this cement. They bought large quantities of it at an undervaluation, as compared with American cements, of some 25 to 50 cents a barrel. A barrel weighs about 400 pounds. It consists of cement packed in canvas bags or put in barrels. They bought it at a lower market price, and no one made any fuss or trouble about it until these gentlemen came here to show up the injustice that was being done to the American cement producer by the purchase of it abroad. That brought the question up to the President, and brought the Senator from Rhode Island square to his feet to demand of us that we should not only pass a law that would authorize the President to make such purchases at his discretion—for that is what it amounts to—but that we should thereby condone and heal over this transaction which the cement men were complaining about. So we are doing both; we are killing two birds with one stone; and the Senator from Rhode Island seems to be very anxious that that stone should hit its mark as suddenly as possible and with as little discussion as possible.

That is the cement question. A similar question, but a still more important one in some respects, is the one which relates to the construction of dredges and steel shovels. There are now thirty benches in the Culebra cut, which is about 7½ miles long. Upon each of those thirty benches is built a double-track railroad. On one of those tracks runs a steel shovel and on the other track run the cars that carry off what the shovel digs up. Of course there must be a continual supply of cars at the shovels in order to prevent loss of time in that very expensive operation. The thirty benches that are now ready would occupy thirty shovels, without any respect to the reserve that is absolutely necessary to replace a shovel when one has turned itself upside down and gone down into the valley, as is frequently the case. We have got to have a large reserve.

No estimate has been made, Mr. President, that I am aware of, as to the number of shovels that will be required to dig that canal. An estimate has been made of this hand-to-mouth business, that we will want so many shovels in a certain space of time, but no general estimate has ever been made, that I am aware of, as to how many shovels will be consumed in the work that is to be done in digging out that great gulch through Culebra.

So in regard to dredges. If a sea-level canal is adopted, many more dredges will be needed than if you adopt the lock canal, as I estimate and as I believe. But the taking in of these dredges will dispense with the work of many of the shovels; so that when you come to balance up the account between the machines that are put there, the cost of them would be about the same, perhaps, whether you have a sea-level canal or a lock canal, and no argument can be made in favor of or against either plan in respect of the machinery that is to be employed in the working out of the ditch.

Now, here appears to be a bidding let out for the making of two powerful steam dredges. Mr. President, no dredge that does not stand at the very head and front of all such constructions in the world ought ever to be put in that canal to dredge out a sea-level canal or the parts of a sea-level canal that belong to a lock canal. We ought to have the very best; and I have not any doubt that up to date we have got the best.

Plans and specifications have been worked out very diligently and very scientifically for these great dredges. They are enormous structures and cost a vast amount of money. I forget just what the prices are in these biddings, but perhaps some Senator can remind me just what the prices are in the biddings for these two dredges that appear to be considered as the test. It appears to be a test case we are considering.

The Scotch manufacturers and the Dutch manufacturers are in competition with each other in the bidding. I said incautiously yesterday, and upon incorrect information, that I believed that there was a combination in Europe for the purpose of holding the prices down below our market, with the view of getting the control of it and managing the supply and the number of dredges that we would hereafter be compelled to buy. After a call from a gentleman who is a member of one of these companies—the Dutch company, I believe—I am assured that I was mistaken in that statement, and I am informed that they are really in competition with each other.

Now, here is a difference in the cost of two dredges of $70,000, or $35,000 a dredge, between the American bid and the foreign bid. Thirty-five thousand dollars, Mr. President, is a good deal of money upon a single dredge. How many do we need? Nobody has intimated to us how many are to be needed. I do not believe there is an engineer connected with canal matters to-day who can state, or who would undertake to state, how many dredges will be needed in opening up either a sea-level or a lock canal at Panama. Two are presented; and we find a difference of $70,000 between the American bidders and the foreign bidders in regard to those two. I judge—I think I can not be incorrect in it—that we can not possibly get along with less than fifty of these dredges. A more reasonable calculation is that we shall require 100 dredges in working out that canal either as a lock canal or a sea-level canal, because a sea-level canal and, if you please, a lock canal likewise, is 200 to 250 feet wide at the bottom and gets wider at the surface, according to the softness or the hardness of the earth on either side of the canal prism. Two hundred feet would mean perhaps that three dredges could work abreast in that 200 feet in attacking what was in front of them and sending the "spoil," as it is called, back to the rear in barges, and carried out to sea.

Suppose we put the number of dredges at fifty, and that that will be the full complement that will be demanded in the construction of the canal when it is completed. Why do I say "suppose?" Because these great engineers have not enabled me to say anything else. These matters ought to have been here, and if they had been thinking as much about the interest and welfare of the Government of the United States in digging this canal as they have been thinking about the controversies in which their personal greatness is concerned we should have had very much closer estimates.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Alabama has perhaps given more thought, more consideration, has written more and spoken more than any gentleman, I think, in this country upon the subject-matter of the construction of an isthmian canal; he has most ably discussed its various problems; and I want to ask him if he does not believe that it would be to the interest of the Government to let contracts to private parties for constructing the canal, for the excavation of the rock and the earth, and the building of locks, if it is to be a lock canal, rather than for the Government itself to undertake the work? If the Senator answers in the affirmative, would not the adoption of that method perhaps solve this whole question so far as the purchasing of dredges, etc., is concerned, whether they are to be purchased at home or abroad?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I happened to be in the very act of presenting that question when my friend interrupted me with a compliment that almost takes me off my feet, but which I feel is quite undeserved, for while I have thought and studied a great deal about this canal, it has been with very small material at my command, mental, as well as information from the outside. I have had to guess my way through this intricacy of trouble and danger and to feel my way along, like one groping in the dark trying to ascertain something by touch that he could not see.

I was about to say that the building of these dredges requires special and very important preparation. I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that when we undertook to change our Navy from the old wooden system to the present great steel system, and our guns from pot metal, etc., that we had in the old Navy into the enormous machines of destruction we now have—when we first approached that subject, there was very much more ignorance in the Senate of the United States on it than there is to-day regarding the canal, and that is saying a good deal. But we found that it was necessary to have an establishment somewhere to make guns, and that great man, whose memory I venerate with affection, the late Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, at his own expense went abroad and took with him experts to examine the machines of Europe for the making of guns. He came back and secured the location of the magnificent gun plant at the Washington Navy-Yard, which has been a credit to the Government every day that it has existed.

But the billets had to be furnished. Steel of a certain tensile strength and breaking strain, and so forth, and so on, had to be furnished, and that had to be done by contract at places where the steel could be manufactured. We let out some very generous contracts to some of our excellent manufacturers, and they went ahead and produced a steel equal to any that was produced in Europe, and some people say it is better. We built up steel-producing establishments, furnaces, rolling mills, hammers, and the like, constructing some of the greatest hammers that were ever constructed in the world and upon entirely new principles—hydraulic compressors and hydrostatic hammers. After a while the contracts were gone over and over in this Senate from session to session and we found that these American producers were willing to sell—perhaps they had contracts to sell—the Russian Government the steel they were producing at a lower rate than they were willing to sell it to the Government of the United States. Senators all recall that great controversy; and it is now about to repeat itself in a small way, but exactly in the same way, in regard to the building of these dredges and steam shovels.

There are only two machines that are worthy of consideration, or of mention almost, in connection with the digging of this canal. One is the steam shovel and the other is the steam dredge. There are several establishments in the United States which have been patronized in the purchase of steam shovels. The prices are given in this document here, as well as the date of purchase and the firms from whom the shovels had been purchased. They are pretty costly and somewhat delicate, for I know that a very large expenditure is necessary to replace the steel teeth in these machines when they break out.

Now, we are trying to project a plan upon which we can get steam dredges at a fair cost to the Government. The manufacturer that produces a steam dredge has to expend a large amount of money in the preparation for the construction of that particular class of ship. He has to have a plant adapted to it. It has to undergo inspection every hour of its construction, and at the time of delivery it has to be perfect in all of its parts, so far as mechanism can make it.

One of the arguments in favor of paying large prices for steel for making our guns was that the buying of the metal here necessitated the building of establishments in the United States that were suited to the production of this material. Now, suppose you have got 100 steel dredges to build for this canal. Is it not proper, is it not a wise forecast that we should have an establishment or establishments in the United States that are prepared to build them? It will not do to wait, Mr. President, until some of your dredges break down or you have a pressing necessity for other dredges, and then go skirmishing around through the country to see if you can find a man who will build you a great steam dredge. A man can not afford to put his money into such establishments and to await the opportunity of getting bids for work. After the plant has been built, after he has expended his money, and is waiting for the opportunity to secure the contract, it may go to another competitor, and so on. So this is a business that must be entered upon, if at all, in the right way.

The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has put the question to me as to whether this part of the work and every part of the work of digging the canal could properly be done under contract rather than by the Government. I say that peculiarly and conspicuously it is necessary that a contract should be made with some competent and proper person for a supply of the steel dredges that the United States may need in the entire work of digging this canal. I mean a continuous and uninterrupted supply.

If we had such an establishment as was described by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] the other day, which he says has put in the lowest bid, and which is perfectly competent to make these dredges—if we had an establishment such as that and it answered all the commendations that the Senator has bestowed upon it, would it not be wise for the Senate of the United States to take a little time to consider a contract which would cover the whole period of the construction of the canal and provide that dredges should be supplied to the Government of the United States as they were needed, at a certain fixed cost? We could well afford to give a company undertaking such a contract a very decided premium on their work, because they would have themselves and their workmen and their appliances and machinery of every kind adapted to the particular work we have got to do, without providing it in haste. It is a great work. Leave the supply of dredges for this canal at harum-scarum, with dredges to be purchased whenever we find an opportunity of getting a dredge at what we consider a low price, and, Mr. President, you are on the wrong track. You are liable to be disappointed.

There is no feature of this work that ought to be more under the control of contract than the supply of dredges and steam shovels. We can buy rails to lay down spur tracks, and the like of that, from almost any manufactory in the world. There are plenty of them in the United States. We can buy locomotives from American manufacturers, who are making those machines for the use of the railroads, and we might, as to locomotives and as to steel rails, and the like of that, not enter into a permanent contract for the supply of all that are needed; but we can not do so as to the dredges and we can not do so as to the steam shovels.

In being here discussing the question of how we shall handle this difference of $70,000 in the cost of two dredges and giving the preference into the hands of the American manufacturer, are we not belittling the subject? Ought we not to take it up and treat it as a great qusetion, to be permanently provided for in the legislation of Congress?

This is a land of law, Mr. President, and not of discretion in the hands of the Executive or of any other Department of the Government of the United States. I do not like the type of this resolution; I do not like the principles on which it is based. It is on a false foundation, providing, as it does, that we shall devolve the settlement of a question of this kind upon the personal judgment of the President of the United States, not upon a commission, but upon the President of the United States, and that he shall decide whether a contract proposed, in answer to a demand for bids for making these dredges, is extortionate or unreasonable. How far does that power go? It might be easy enough and in satisfaction of American prejudice or American sentiment to settle it in favor of the American as against the foreigner. That might be a very popular movement; but when you come to the American manufacturers themselves, there are three or four or five bids here for making these dredges from different establishments in the United States. They have spent a large amount of money in making up their estimates and their calculations as to what it would cost them to put up the necessary machinery and fixtures for making these dredges. Some of these gentlemen informed me that they had spent $10,000 in making their plans and specifications. That, of course, is all wasted and thrown away, and they lose the money by being here nibbling at this job, and seeing whether or not they can satisfy some Democrat who may be in the Presidential chair for the next term, and who will want, of course, to traffic as much as he can upon all the expectations of this great Treasury of the United States if he follows the drift of these present times. It is more than likely we have got that difficulty to meet, and, as an old Democrat who is soon going out of service, I am trying to guard you against what a Democratic President of the same sort as Mr. Roosevelt would do, if he had a chance at this job, in deciding between his friends as to who was the best and the lowest bidder, or who was the extortionate or was the unconscionable man.

All that is wrong. The Senate of the United States ought to have more self-respect than to delegate to any man in the world any such power of lawmaking to apply to every special case that may arise. We ought to take up the subject and consider it and decide it for ourselves, upon our responsibility; and, above all else, in regard to these dredges, right now a law ought to be passed to enable the President of the United States to make contracts for dredges clear through the whole job; and you can well afford to make them, at least for ten years, if not longer. So much for that feature in reply to the very pertinent and sensible question of the Senator from California.

When we come to the great work of doing the whole business, Mr. President, it is beyond all question, upon the evidence that is submitted to the Senate to-day in the reports of this committee—the best testimony that can be obtained anywhere in the world—that this canal will not be built within thirty years, if built at all, under the present system. We have to come down to the proposition of building the canal by contract, one contract or several. And there are several distinct species of work in it. Dredging is one. That is a speciality in itself. Construction of dams is another. That is also a specialty. Digging out the earth and removing the great basaltic plates that underly the Culebra cut 7½ miles is another specialty, and a very important one, and one that will tax to the very extreme the ingenuity and the patience and the money and the power of any contractor who gets it. These contracts separate themselves naturally into divisions, and we can very well intrust these special subdivisions of the subject into the hands of contractors who have special information and special knowledge of facts requisite to the completion of the work in due order and in due season.

There is one proposition connected with it upon which I wish to say a word at this moment, it being perhaps the most opportune time I shall ever have, and that is the control of the railroad across the Isthmus. I leave out of view the very important function that the Panama Railroad performs in respect of interoceanic commerce, and consider only the question of its usefulness, its indispensable usefulness, in the removal of the material and the other hauling that is necessary to be done in the construction of the canal on any plan. That railroad must be retained under the control of the Government of the United States, whether the canal is built by contract or by the Government, for the reason that if we have four or five contractors there—the argument is strongly intensified in that view of the subject—we have got, by governmental power and authority, to admeasure the amount of service that railroad is going to do for each contractor, so as to keep the contractors out of collision with each other and with the Government, and more particularly, to avoid the objection that the Government has not complied with its plans and specifications and is liable for damages for not having supplied the cars or the railroad tracks and the like just as they were needed by the contractors. We must have absolute power over that transportation, and we must have no responsibilities or liabilities to contractors for accidents or mistakes or miscarriages in bringing their material back and forth or in dumping it after they have excavated it from the canal, whether dry excavation or water excavation.

I wish to say this right now: It is the duty of the Government of the United States to put that railroad in law where it actually is in fact, in the control and ownership of the Government of the United States and the Isthmian Canal Commission, without any of this supposititious instrumentality that we call the New York company, standing there as an independent body in the very bosom of the work, with powers under the laws of New York, as they contend, to control the United States in the building of that canal. The United States owns everything about the railroad, every dollar of stock, and all the property, and has possession of the whole of it. Why should we keep up that vain, technical illusion? I will tell you why. Because the income from that railroad is heavy; it is coming in constantly, and somebody wants to keep the money that is derived from the railroad and its earnings out of the Treasury of the United States, so that they can handle it without coming here for an appropriation according to law. They want to go to New York for a law and not come to Congress.

I mention this as I go along because I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the real points of difficulty in this situation, in the hope that we will take time to consider it properly and that we will enact laws here which are worthy of the body and worthy of the great undertaking which we have begun, or attempted to begin.

I think, Mr. President, that the joint resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island is based on an incorrect principle, and of course if it is enacted in this regard, it will be hereafter reenacted in regard to everything else that may be demanded—the vast supplies of timber, coal, of iron in various forms, of food supplies, clothing. You would be astonished on looking over this list to see what has been purchased and the immense variety—from hair combs up to locomotives. But you adopt the principle that the President of the United States has a right to decide between bidders upon his conception as to whether the price is reasonable or extortionate, and when the Democratic successor to Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, comes in, I am very much afraid that the grand old Democratic party will lose its character in trying to sustain the preferences that that individual may choose to give between his friends.

Of course I would not impute that to the present Administration, but when you get over this one, as you will very soon and very happily, and get into a Democratic atmosphere, with a Democrat at the head of the Government, I do not want that man to be permitted to leave the high functions of his great office and come down and go to dickering between bidders for supplies, preferring his friends and taking care of them, because there is nobody who will take care of his friends sooner than the President of the United States. He seems to embosom every friend he has or everybody who pretends to be his friend—I am not speaking of the present President, but of the President of the United States—in the deepest receptacles of his soul and to stand by them through thick and thin, assuming that anything that is done unto one of his friends is done unto him also. I am afraid of a President who has too many friends when he is required to distribute great contracts among them. I prefer to save a President from his friends by enacting laws and requiring him to obey them.

What I am attacking here is principle. What I want the Senate to do is to take pause on this joint resolution, and let some Senator of the majority frame a bill to have these dredges bought by contract, and let the contract extend for ten years to come, at least—five years at the very lowest. Let it be provided that the President of the United States shall have the right to let contracts for the building of these dredges, and let the laws give a preference to American citizens and American establishments, because we want these establishments. We want them just as much as we want the iron works and the steel works in the United States that are now supplying gun metal and armor plate for our ships. It should also be remembered that when we get through with that job we will have to throw these dredges away or sell them. That ought to be carried into the calculation of the cost of the canal. Let it be so arranged that in the course of our action in building this canal and using these great steel dredges at the end of the time we will have some great establishment or establishments in the United States prepared to go on with other great works that we may have to do, for all these works are in the interest of the progress of the Government and of the people of the United States—solid, successful progress. I do not think we ought to be indulging in any sham or temporary work about this business. I do not think the canal property and the entourage, the whole layout there, should be subordinated to mere temporary ideas or the advantages of political parties or the friendship of individuals. I think it ought to be cleared from all these things as far as it is possible to do.

The joint resolution on which we are acting was referred to the Committee on Finance, and I was very glad to have it referred to them, because it appeared to be a financial question. I saw that the discussion of it would run afoul of the tariff question naturally and necessarily. It involves that as it stands to-day. It is a question whether the President of the United States shall have the right to repeal the tariff in regard to the 45 per cent importation duties on these dredges. That is about the substance of it. I am very much of an antitariff man, but I am very much tempted to go in that direction for the sake of building up in this country these establishments which are so essential to its present and future prosperity.

I devised a plan here, but I am too modest a man to bring it before the Senate, because Senators have not thought about it, and they will not think about it. They would vote it down, and I do not want to offer it until there is a better chance for its consideration. What is that? To set apart the Canal Zone for the construction of the canal and the railroad appurtenant thereto, not for the purpose of establishing there a civil government; not for the purpose of carrying on friendly or unfriendly diplomatic relations with the little republic down there, which seems to be in a great broil just at this time about an election; not for any such purposes at all, but for the solitary and sole purpose of building the great work which it is claimed will be the triumph of American genius, American patriotism, and American power.

This country can not be glorified more than to have successful, decent, and honest work done in Panama. It can not more disgrace itself than to load itself down with the frauds and villainies and corruptions and combinations that have already given to Panama a name that is disfigured in history as the seat of corruption and crime. We ought to come out and take our stand upon our own doctrines, our own rights, and our own principles; and the world, when it comes to pronounce upon the completed work, will say "the American Government has done this great work through the labors and the taxing power of a patriotic citizenship;" and it is, after all, the most material and the grandest monument that can be erected to the history of this country.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word before the vote is taken. I desire to repeat in the hearing of the Senate what I have already said, and to emphasize it, that this amendment does not contemplate the purchase of material in foreign markets. It simply provides that while purchased in our own markets, the articles must be sold to the Government at the same rates at which the manufacturers sell the same articles to foreigners for foreign consumption.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I desire to put one or two matters in the RECORD as supplementary to the debate had here yesterday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me out of order to make a report?

Mr. BACON. That is not in order.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can we have the amendment read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. STONE. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. STONE. I am going to occupy only a very few minutes.

Mr. President, yesterday I called attention to the fact that the Government through its officials had paid $1,300,000 for two ships which it had cost the owners only about $1,100,000 to build. I also called attention to, and sought to emphasize it, the fact that these ships had been in the active service of the Ward Line, to which they belonged and which sold them to the Government, for a period of seven or eight years; that it was a rule established by experience and generally observed by shipowners to write off 5 per cent on the original value of the vessels that they were sailing for every year they were in service. Based on that, I made the deduction that the actual market value of these vessels at the time they were purchased could not have exceeded about 60 per cent of their original value. So the Government paid $1,300,000 for vessels which really were not worth in the market exceeding about $700,000.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] interrupted to ask me if I had taken the trouble to ascertain what repairs were put upon those ships and proceeded to say—I quote now what the Senator said yesterday:

> While it is a fact that there is an annual depreciation in ships, that annual depreciation can be made good by proper repairs.
> Mr. STONE. Does the Senator contend that a ship's life might be continued forever by repairs?
> Mr. GALLINGER. It can be continued for a long time.
> Mr. STONE. The rule is to write off 5 per cent annually and keep up repairs.
> Mr CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not true that the average life of a ship is about twenty years. If that be true, evidently a ship that has been used for seven or eight years would not be as valuable as a new ship.

The only possible purpose the Senator from New Hampshire could have had in injecting into my speech what I have read and some other things he said which I have not read, was to create the impression that these ships were kept as good as new by repairs that were made upon them, and that they were as good as new when the Government purchased them a year ago.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, made to the Secretary of the Treasury on October 19, 1901. I desire to read two or three lines from that report, as follows:

> The first cost of a vessel is carried into its annual cost of operation in the three items of depreciation, insurance, and interest. Depreciation is generally reckoned at 5 per cent, a rate sufficient at the end of twenty years to remove a vessel as an asset from the books of its owner.

That is the general rule, but if we are to accept what the Senator from New Hampshire says, then the rule is reversed as to these particular ships. They grew better by reason of use and repairs. These ships, like wine, improved with age.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator argue that at the end of twenty years, with 5 per cent depreciation each year, the ships are worth nothing?

Mr. STONE. I make the statement of what the rule is as it obtains among shipowners, and I support the statement by what I have read from the Commissioner of Navigation. There is no need for me to make any contention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not a fact that at the end of twenty years a ship loses its register of A 1, for instance?

Mr. STONE. Certainly; but according to the Senator's conception it ought to be double A 1. It ought to get better.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no. That is the hallucination of the Senator from Missouri. It is not my contention at all.

Mr. STONE. Then I misunderstood the Senator, and it is a hallucination.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Then, again, the Senator from New Hampshire has not, perhaps, investigated the matter sufficiently to know that the ships are not only repaired, but strengthened and made much more efficient than they were when originally built.

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator said they were better by reason of use and repair. That is all I care to say upon that particular subject.

One other thing. An attempt was made also to impress us with the belief that every possible, at least every reasonable, effort was made by the President and the Secretary of War, or the subordinate officials under them in charge, to purchase ships abroad, and that after exhausting their efforts in good faith they were unable to buy abroad, and were, therefore, in a sense, compelled to buy at home at higher prices.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] read from the testimony of Mr. Shonts. I desire to read a little from the testimony of Mr. Shonts as bearing upon the particular matter to which I have referred—that is, the effort made by Mr. Shonts and his superiors to buy ships in foreign markets. I read now from the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, page 1431. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] did the interrogating:

If I understand you correctly, Mr. Farnham had nothing to do with the inspecting or making the trade or carrying on any of the negotiations in respect to the Ward Line steamers that you bought?

Mr. SHONTS. Not after he went abroad. I think that he did look at them before he went abroad.

Mr. Farnham was one of the clerks of Mr. Cromwell, be it remembered.

Senator MORGAN. Did he ever make any report about it?

Mr. SHONTS. He talked with me about them. I do not think he ever made any official report.

Senator MORGAN. What price did they propose to Farnham to take for them?

Mr. SHONTS. I am not sure whether it was $700,000 or $750,000 at first.

Senator MORGAN. And you gave how much for them?

Mr. SHONTS. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Senator MORGAN. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes.

Senator MORGAN. After he had had his talk with you about these Ward Line ships then he went abroad and inspected an English ship?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes.

Senator MORGAN. Only one?

Mr. SHONTS. Oh no; he inspected a lot of them.

Senator MORGAN. Did he report upon them?

Mr. SHONTS. A number of them.

Senator MORGAN. Did he report upon them as to price, and all that?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes; we have a long report from him.

Senator MORGAN. You have a copy of that report, have you?

Mr. SHONTS. I can get it.

Senator MORGAN. I would like to have it in this record.

Mr. SHONTS. All right.

Senator MORGAN. You will furnish it, if you please. Then you have the prices of all of them, and a description of the ships?

Mr. SHONTS. All that he wrote about—a description of the ships, etc.—yes, sir.

I have not been able to see that report. I do not think it has been filed; at least it is not printed in these hearings.

Senator MORGAN. Did he acquire this knowledge of shipping, shipbuilding, and ship values while he was a clerk in the law office of Mr. Cromwell in New York?

Mr. SHONTS. I understood that he had had more or less to do with shipping for some years. I think some one told me he had sailed before the mast.

Senator MORGAN. He was a sailor before the mast?

Mr. SHONTS. That he had been in the shipping business.

Senator MORGAN. He has been in the employment of this law office on a salary for a number of years.

Mr. SHONTS. I do not know anything about that. I know that I have been told——

Senator MORGAN. Mr. Cromwell's statement to that effect is in the record.

Mr. SHONTS. Yes; I mean I did not know it personally.

Senator KITTREDGE. Do I understand you, Mr. Shonts, to say that the Ward Line was to replace free of cost to the Government the articles that you turned over to it?

Mr. SHONTS. Oh, no; we were to buy our own linen and our own silver and our own china, and they were to take their old ones at some agreed price.

Senator MORGAN. Was not Mr. Farnham sent out for the purpose of skirmishing amongst the English shipowners to see what the prices were?

Mr. SHONTS. Well, yes; he was to report on ships and prices.

Senator MORGAN. Ships and prices?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes.

Senator MORGAN. Was it not your purpose, if you could possibly do it, to buy an American-built ship?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes, sir.

Senator TALIAFERRO. It was your purpose particularly to buy these two ships because you thought they were adapted to your purpose?

Mr. SHONTS. They were more nearly adapted to our work than any others.

Senator MORGAN. Did Farnham render any other service in this purchase of ships except to examine and report upon the prices and the conditions and the form and size and power, etc., of the English ships?

Mr. SHONTS. No.

Senator MORGAN. You sent him across there just to sample the market, to find out what you could get ships for there?

Mr. SHONTS. Well, both, Senator. I did not know how it was going to turn out. We might have run across a bargain there. We might have gotten good ships there that answered our purposes. But as a matter of fact, we only heard of the one that he strongly recommended. That was a new ship, and would answer our purposes, because it had big hatches and was a big freight carrier.

Senator MORGAN. Do I understand that they dropped a hundred thousand dollars on each ship from the price they first asked?

Mr. SHONTS. The price was not paid to me at any time, you understand. I was told that they had commenced at $750,000; but I know that they talked very strongly at $700,000. We finally traded at $650,000.

Senator MORGAN. Yes; and they made a patriotic sacrifice for the flag, and came in and sold them for $650,000?

Mr. SHONTS. I do not know about that. I do not know what their motives were; but they accepted $650,000 each, and we got the ships.

I read that, Mr. President, simply to show that no serious and sincere effort was made to purchase the ships abroad, and the President and the Secretary had declared over and over again that they would go abroad to buy unless a reasonable price were offered at home; that they considered it their duty under their oath of office to buy abroad unless fair and reasonable prices were asked at home. They were offered, as I stated yesterday, two ships of 6,000 tons for $750,000. They abandoned the whole project of purchasing abroad, came home and bought two ships of 5,700 tons for $1,300,000 and now excuse the transaction by saying that they could not find any ships abroad suitable to the service, and were compelled to buy those they did buy in the American market.

I have read this to show that as a matter of fact no honest or sincere effort was made to buy the cheaper ships abroad and therefore to carry out the declared purpose of the Administration. The declaration of the Administration was made for public effect and consumption, and it was quietly abandoned under political pressure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and so I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]. He is absent. I do not know how he would vote, but I think he would vote "yea." I transfer my pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who is absent, and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask if the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CLAY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts, and withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has not voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MONEY. I will state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is absent on imperative business.

Mr. CLAY. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. GEARIN], so that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will stand paired with the junior Senator from Oregon, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 37, as follows:

Carmack	Gamble	Mallory
Clark, Mont.	Gearin	Martin
Clarke, Ark.	Gorman	Morgan

So Mr. BACON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONEY. I send up an amendment which I ask to have inserted at the end of the paragraph as section 2. I wish to have it read and to make a few remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the joint resolution the following:

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the purchase of domestic articles of manufacture and production in foreign markets.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the object of the joint resolution, supported by very distinguished Senators, is that all the material shall be of domestic manufacture which enters into the construction of this great public work, which, at the lowest estimate of engineers, will cost $247,000,000 on any plan selected, and it is the opinion of a great many other people, some engineers and some inquiring minds, that it will reach four or five hundred million dollars. It is their intention that all this material shall be supplied by domestic articles of production and manufacture, in order that citizens of the United States may have the exclusive sale to the Government of these articles; and of course these gentlemen see in this resolution the continuance of what they deem a wise public policy.

The amendment which I have offered as a second section does not at all disturb that. I take it for granted that while these distinguished Senators desire that the American producer and manufacturer shall have exclusive market for goods furnished for the building of the canal, they do not propose that the Government should pay excessive prices, or, in other words, secure the whole trade to American citizens; but they desire that the Government shall buy its material as cheaply as possible, confining itself to articles of American production and manufacture.

Now, taking that for granted, and giving these gentlemen full credit for their patriotism in maintaining what they deem a wise public policy to protect the industries of the United States, and at the same time giving them a like credit for patriotic purpose, desiring that the Government, confining itself exclusively to this class of sellers, shall have an opportunity to buy as cheaply as possible, I have provided by this second section that the Government can buy American products anywhere in the world at the market price, and I do not see how any man can object to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read; it is very brief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the purchase of domestic articles of manufacture and production in foreign markets.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MONEY. I call for a division. I do not question, of course, the Chair, but I think Senators ought to vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has the right to demand a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 13, nays 35.

Mr. MONEY. I now demand the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I note the absence from the Chamber of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. As I have a pair with that Senator, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], and that pair can stand for all votes upon this subject. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SPOONER. I ought to state that on this vote the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] stands paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. MCCREARY. My colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]. My colleague is absent discharging his duties as a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy. I shall not make the statement any more to-day.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bacon	Frazier	Money	Simmons
Bailey	La Follette	Overman	Stone
Culberson	Latimer	Patterson	Taliaferro

NOT VOTING—38.

Alger	Crane	Gorman	Morgan
Allee	Cullom	Hemenway	Newlands

Burton	Dryden	Lodge	Platt
Carmack	Elkins	McEnery	Proctor
Clark, Mont.	Foster	McLaurin	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Gamble	Mallory
Clay	Gearin	Martin

So Mr. MONEY'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment entirely on a different subject. It has no tariff in it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The SECRETARY. On line 5 of the joint resolution, after the word "manufacture," insert the words "and from the lowest bidder."

Mr. GALLINGER. So as to read?

The SECRETARY. So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture and from the lowest bidder, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, if the President of the United States were to make all these purchases in person, I would not consider the amendment nearly so important as I consider it now in the present attitude of things, when Mr. Cromwell is one of the most important purchasing agents of the United States, and men like him are the purchasing agents.

Mr. President, I have had some little experience on this matter of purchasing. The Book says, "The race is to the swift," but it frequently happens in the United States that the race has no connection with the value or the price of the article sold, though it has a good deal to do with the man who has the selling of it. During the Spanish war the Government had use for a large amount of coal down at the end of Florida. Alabama could have furnished the coal much cheaper than almost any other part of the world, and was much more convenient to the place where the Government wanted to use it, but that coal was bought away up toward the Lakes.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Alabama will modify his amendment so as to read "from the lowest responsible bidder"——

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly; I am willing to do that. I do not wish to buy from anyone who is not responsible.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be willing to accept that amendment if the Senator will modify it in the way I have just suggested.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well; I am willing to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] as modified.

The SECRETARY. After the word "manufacture," on line 5, it is proposed to insert the words "and from the lowest responsible bidder."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the material, supplies, and machinery of all kinds for the construction of the Panama Canal shall be purchased at the cheapest price, conditions as to quality, prompt delivery, and responsibility of bidders being substantially the same: Provided, however, That in cases in which such material, supplies, or machinery are produced in the United States and the conditions as to quality, prompt delivery, responsibility of bidders, and price are substantially the same as those respecting such articles as are offered by foreign bidders, the bids of citizens of the United States shall be given preference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who, I see, is not present; but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] having been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bacon	Dubois	McCreary	Rayner
Bailey	Frazier	Money	Simmons
Clay	La Follette	Overman	Stone
Culberson	Latimer	Patterson	Taliaferro

NAYS—38.

Aldrich	Clark, Wyo.	Hansbrough	Scott

Burrows	Fulton	Nelson	Wetmore
Carter	Gallinger	Perkins
Clapp	Hale	Piles

NOT VOTING—35.

Alger	Crane	Gorman	Morgan
Allee	Cullom	Hemenway	Newlands

Berry	Depew	Hopkins	Penrose

Burton	Elkins	McEnery	Platt
Carmack	Foster	McLaurin	Proctor
Clark, Mont.	Gamble	Mallory	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Gearin	Martin

So Mr. MALLORY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, so far as I recall, the information which is given in Senate Document No. 444, with respect to the purchase of dredges for the Panama Canal, has not yet been given general publicity. I therefore ask, before the vote is taken on the joint resolution, to have this document printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 444, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith copies of correspondence between the Secretary of War and myself on the subject of the purchase of two steel dredges for the Panama Canal.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 15, 1906.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 14, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Isthmian Canal Commission advertised for bids for two seagoing suction dredges, to be used—one in the harbor of Colon and Cristobal, on the north, or Atlantic, side of the Isthmus, and the other at La Boca, on the Panama, or Pacific, side of the Isthmus. The dredges were to be built according to certain plans and specifications. The proposals required the bidders to state where they proposed to erect and deliver the dredges and the time that would be required to erect and deliver them.

There were nine bids, seven by American bidders, one by Dutch bidders, and one by Scotch bidders. I shall refer only to the lowest two bids.

The Maryland Steel Company, with its headquarters at Sparrows Point, Md., bid for the two dredges to be delivered at Sparrows Point, $724,850, to be completed in 365 days. The Scotch firm of William Simons & Co., of Renfrew, Scotland, bid for the same dredges, delivered in Scotland, on the Clyde, $654,000, one to be completed in 305 days and the other in 335 days. This made a difference of $70,850 in favor of the Scotch bid. The Scotch bid was in the alternative, and offered to deliver the dredges, which were required to be seagoing, one for $17,980 at Cristobal, and the other for $34,020 at La Boca, in addition to the price for delivery on the Clyde. No figures were furnished by the Maryland Steel Company for the price at which it would deliver the dredges at Cristobal and La Boca.

I inclose, however, an argument in which the Maryland Company points out certain advantages accruing to the Government in the acceptance of its bid over that of the Scotch bid, which would reduce the difference between the two bids. I submit, also, the comment of Mr. Shonts on this letter of the Maryland Company, the statement of Mr. Brown, the representative and attorney in fact of Simons & Co., and a memorandum from Brigadier-General Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers, stating the advantage of the Scotch bid. General Mackenzie includes a telegram from Major Sanford, of the Corps of Engineers, who has had large experience in dredge design and construction, and whom the president of the Maryland Company was especially anxious for me to consult in this matter.

The result of these comments seems to be that there is, under any circumstances, a difference in favor of the bid of Simons & Co. of about 8 per cent of the total expenditure. There is no question of the high standing of both bidders, and no doubt that if the bid of either is accepted it will be satisfactorily performed. The exact question now presented is whether on the sole ground that one bidder is an American manufacturing corporation and the other is Scotch, the Isthmian Canal Commission shall pay to the Maryland Company from $60,000 to $70,000 more for two steel dredges than the price at which it may buy those dredges from Simons & Co.

In my letter of January 12, 1905, in which I transmitted to you the first report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, I invited your attention to the general policy to be pursued in cases like this, in the following language:

"An important question of policy is yet to be determined. If the Isthmian Canal Commission are not bound by any restriction of Congress as to where they shall purchase machinery, material, and supplies then it would seem to be their duty to construct the canal as cheaply as possible and so to buy what they need where they can get it cheapest. This, however, is certain to produce, every time that a large contract is awarded to a foreign manufacturer or dealer, an outcry on the part of the American unsuccessful competitors. If Congress approves the policy of favoring American manufacturers and dealers, even if it increases the cost of the construction of the canal, then it seems to me only just that it should declare this policy by law and lay down a rule which the Commission can easily follow."

This letter, with the accompanying report, was submitted by you to Congress January 13, 1905, and was referred in the House to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and in the Senate to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. No action has since been taken by Congress on this subject.

I also append a statement made by me before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, on the 20th of last month, on the same subject.

The construction of the canal is being carried on under the so-called "Spooner Act," approved June 28, 1902. This act authorizes you, as the President, and the Commission under you, to make contracts for the construction of the canal and to buy the necessary supplies, machinery, and material, and it imposes no specific limitation upon the manner of your purchases or the method of your contracting. This is to be determined under general principles of law. I find no specific legislation which would control you in determining what bid should be accepted. The general principle which applies is of course that it is your duty to build the canal as economically as you can, and, therefore, as between two bids of otherwise equal merit you should accept the lower bid.

In the appropriation act of March 3, 1875, there was contained the following clause, which is still the law:

"That in all contracts for material for any public improvement the Secretary of War shall give preference to American material; and all labor thereon shall be performed within the jurisdiction of the United States."

This has application to public improvements in the United States which are by law directed to be conducted under the War Department. It of course does not extend to the construction of the canal under the Spooner Act, which contemplates the action of the President through a canal commission. The intervention of the Secretary of War in the matter is only to assist the President, and is not by virtue of statutory law, but by an Executive order issued in the exercise of the discretion vested in the President under the Spooner Act to select such agents as he sees fit to aid him in the duties thereby imposed upon him. Moreover, the act of March 3, 1875, would not justify the giving of preference to American material in case foreign material were offered at a cheaper price. The Engineering Bureau of this Department, which has acted under the statute for a number of years, has never given such a construction to the clause. In its invitations for bids there has always appeared in the general instructions to bidders the following:

"(2) Preference will be given to articles or materials of domestic production, conditions of quality and price being equal, including in the price of foreign articles the duty thereon."

For nearly ten years Government importations have paid duty.

In the act of September 22, 1888 (25 Stat. L., 489), which is the fortifications appropriation act of that year, it was provided that—

"All guns and materials purchased under the authority of this section shall be of American production and furnished by citizens of the United States."

This was an express limitation and prevented the purchase of any materials outside of the United States. It had application, however, specifically to fortifications, and did not indicate a general policy on this subject.

On the other hand, the general Congressional policy as to the purchases of Army supplies is contained in the following proviso of most Army appropriation bills:

"That after advertisement all the supplies for use in the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered * * *."

The only case of purchase by the Government of supplies or material directly affected by a statute which furnishes a precedent of any relevancy in the present instance is that of the purchase of quartermaster supplies in the Philippine Islands under section 3716, which has been the law since July 13, 1866. That section provides that—

"The Quartermaster's Department of the Army, in obtaining supplies for the military service, shall state in all advertisements for bids for contracts that a preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal."

When the Army went to the Philippines, which were not affected by the Dingley tariff and where Army supplies were admitted free of duty, the question arose as to where Army supplies were to be purchased. The practice was adopted under this section to buy supplies for the army in the Philippines where they could be had at the cheapest price, preference of course being given to American supplies and material, when conditions of price and quality were equal. Accordingly, large amounts of meat have been purchased from Australia instead of from the United States, because meat could be purchased at about one-half what it would cost to bring it over from the Pacific coast.

The result of a consideration of general principles of law and the practice of the Government, in the absence of specific direction to the contrary, is that in the construction of the Panama Canal in the Canal Zone on the Isthmus, which is outside the tariff wall surrounding the United States proper, and into which, by virtue of the Hay-Varilla treaty with the Republic of Panama, material, supplies, and machinery of all kinds for the construction of the canal are to be introduced free from tariff or imposts, it is your duty to buy where you can obtain the material, supplies, and machinery at the cheapest price, other conditions with respect to quality, prompt delivery, etc., being equal. This view it seems to me is confirmed by the failure of Congress to direct any different course on your part, although the matter was brought to its attention more than a year ago, and your view of your duty in the premises, if Congress took no further action, was clearly indicated.

I ought to add that, while of course a very large proportion of all the purchases made for the construction of the canal have been from American merchants and manufacturers, some purchases have already been made abroad, and a saving effected in the purchase of comparatively small quantities of cement. In the construction of the canal an enormous quantity of cement will have to be purchased, and the question will soon recur again as to the acceptance of foreign bids for this material.

Members of Congress have manifested an interest in this matter, and Senators DICK and ANKENY have applied to me to know the situation. I append correspondence that I have had with both of those gentlemen, together with a form of resolution which, at Senator ANKENY's request, I had drafted to carry out his views. The resolution has been introduced into the Senate by Senator DICK.

As I pointed out to Senator ANKENY, if this resolution is to control the acceptance of bids for the construction of these dredges, then it should be promptly considered and passed by Congress, for it is of great importance to secure their early construction. If there is no prospect of early action by Congress, I shall direct Mr. Shonts, unless ordered by you to take a different course, that he accept the bid of William Simons & Co., of Renfrew, Scotland.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 14, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have received your letter of May 14 in reference to the purchase of two steel dredges for the Panama Canal. I approve of your views, and shall transmit this correspondence to Congress for such action, if any, as it may see fit to take thereon.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. WILLIAM H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

ISTHMIAN CANAL AFFAIRS,
OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION, PANAMA CANAL BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., May 4, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose you herewith abstract of bids opened April 23, 1906, on two seagoing suction dredges, item 1 being for use at the Cristobal end of the canal, and item 2 being for use at the La Boca end of the canal, together with a letter from the Maryland Steel Company, who are the lowest American bidders.

You will observe that the bid of the Maryland Steel Company is about $70,000 higher than the bid of William Simons & Co., of Renfrew, Scotland, for the two dredges delivered at their respective works. The Maryland Steel Company did not submit bids on the basis of delivery at Cristobal and La Boca, respectively, although William Simons & Co. did make bids for such delivery, in addition to delivery at their works.

It will be seen from the letter of the Maryland Steel Company that its object is to show that from their point of view their bid would ultimately be cheaper than the bid of William Simons & Co.

The first two statements of the Maryland Steel Company speak for themselves.

The third statement, I am advised by Purchasing Officer Ross, will not amount to much, as practically the only difference between the cost of inspection in this country and in Scotland would be the cost of transportation of the inspectors to and from Scotland.

In the fourth statement I can not see much force, as only experienced men will be employed in any event, and as these dredges follow the general plan of others now in operation, it will not be difficult to get men familiar with the work.

I do not think there is much force in their fifth statement, as the auxiliaries and articles of outfit mentioned could be purchased either in this country or abroad if not made on the Isthmus.

As to statement No. 6, while I think the figures given as the cost of delivering at Cristobal and La Boca, respectively, dredges built on the Chesapeake are low, yet, even accepting these figures, there is still a considerable difference between the prices of Simons & Co. and those of the Maryland Steel Company, which it is not thought the additional cost of inspection, additional cost of shipping crews, and additional cost and disadvantages of dealing at long distance, which they mention, would offset.

With respect to statement No. 7, while they may have patterns and designs for these exact dredges, you will observe that the length of time they stipulate for building the dredges is thirty days longer than that stipulated by Simons & Co.

Their statement No. 8 may have considerable merit; but in order for it to have considerable merit two things will be required. The first is that these dredges will outlive the period of construction of the canal, which is probably a fact; and the second is, if such proves to be the case, it would have to follow that we would have no further use for them at the harbor entrances of the canal after the canal is constructed, whereas in all probability we will always have use for seagoing dredges for harbor work at both termini.

While we would, of course, prefer to patronize American industries, until the Congress changes the law, are we not compelled to buy in the lowest market?

Very respectfully,

T. P. SHONTS,
Chairman.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

MARYLAND STEEL COMPANY,
MARINE DEPARTMENT,
Sparrows Point, Md., April 30, 1906.

SIR: In view of the fact that the Maryland Steel Company was the lowest American bidder on two dredges for the Isthmus, bids for which were opened on April 23, we desire to call your attention to certain points in connection with our bid:

1. We understand that the only reason for obtaining foreign-built vessels would be a lower cost of the same.

2. The bid submitted by this company was $724,850 for two dredges delivered at Sparrows Point, Md. The lowest foreign bid for these same dredges delivered in Scotland is $654,000, or delivered at the Isthmus $706,000, making a difference of $18,850 between the vessels delivered at their destination or delivered in the Chesapeake Bay.

3. If the vessels are built in Scotland it will be necessary to send inspectors to the foreign works, costing anywhere from $5,000 to $10,000 more than if the inspection were done here.

4. If the vessels are delivered at the Isthmus it will be necessary to assemble and train their crews at that point, at an undoubted disadvantage and considerable increased expense. If the vessels are delivered in Chesapeake Bay, the crews can be shipped there and become thoroughly familiar with the working of the dredges during the time the contractor's tests are made, which tests will be made at a point convenient to the works under the supervision of people thoroughly familiar with this class of dredge, they having previously built six of the same type, two of which are practically duplicates of the dredges in discussion. This point appears to us to be of the utmost importance, since these dredges are of a type that has been developed in this country, the working of which to good advantage depends in a large measure to a proper crew, and it is not within our knowledge that any foreign builders have experience with this particular style of dredge. It is easily possible that serious losses through inefficiency and breakdowns may occur if a properly trained crew is not obtainable.

5. It is undoubtedly desirable that the auxiliaries and articles of outfit (namely, pumps, electric plant, hoisters, steering engine, windlass, capstan, refrigerating machinery, plumbing, gauges, and instruments) should be of American manufacture, so in time of necessity to be more easily and quickly replaced. This would be the case if the dredges were built here, but under the specifications it is, in almost every instance, optional with the builder as to what make of goods he will furnish, and in case of the dredges being built abroad it would be necessary for the Commission to purchase all articles of outfit supplied by them abroad or be under the expense of shipping them from this country. The matter of auxiliaries is of considerable moment, and previous experience with these dredges gives us knowledge of the proper articles to supply.

6. The cost to the Commission of delivering at Cristobal a dredge built on the Chesapeake is a matter of very small moment, being practically the cost of running the vessel for about eight days, amounting to about $2,400. The cost of delivering the other dredge at La Boca is estimated at $23,600 and will take about fifty-five days, making a total difference on the face of the bids of $44,850 between the American and foreign bids, from which should be deducted the additional cost of inspection, additional cost of shipping crews, various additional costs and disadvantages of dealing at long distance, and an almost certain additional cost of putting the dredges into operation, making it entirely problematical as to whether the foreign-built vessels will cost at all less than vessels built in this country.

7. We have patterns and designs for the exact dredges required; have experience with building and running the same; are able to actually start work as soon as the contract is awarded; all of which should be given some consideration.

8. Under present legislation, if these dredges are foreign built it will not be possible to use them in United States waters.

9. Finally, we desire to ask the question, "Is it at all certain that the cost of these dredges to the Commission when actually in operation for one or two months will be less at the foreign price than at the price quoted in this country?"

Very respectfully,

MARYLAND STEEL COMPANY,
H. A. MAGOUN,
Superintendent Marine Department.

Hon. THEODORE P. SHONTS,
Chairman Isthmian Canal Commission, Washington, D. C.

MARYLAND STEEL COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Sparrows Point, Md., May 9, 1906.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry concerning our estimate of cost of delivering the Panama dredges at their stations, we beg to say that as the specifications furnished bidders provide for acceptance by the Government at points of construction only, we have taken as a proper basis for the estimate in question the actual expenditure by the War Department, viz, $2,098, in moving a dredge of similar type, the Benyard, with full dredging crew, from Norfolk to New Orleans, due allowance being made for extra coal storage and other temporary outfit requisite for the trip to the west coast.

The difference in delivered cost between the foreign and American bids on the above basis is, as stated in our former letter, $44,850, or 6.35 per cent in favor of the tender of Messrs. Simonds.

We again respectfully urge that against this difference due weight should be given to the additional costs and disadvantages to which we have before called attention and which as shipbuilders and repairers we can say positively will result from building these dredges in Europe.

Yours, respectfully,

F. W. WOOD, President.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8, 1906.

SIR: With reference to the letter received by the Hon. Theodore P. Shonts, chairman Isthmian Canal Commission, from the Maryland Steel Company, Sparrows Point, re the dredges required for the Isthmus, and which I have had the opportunity to peruse, I have to remark—

First. That with regard to the inspection during construction: Those vessels would be built under the supervision of the officials of the American Bureau of Shipping or British Lloyds, and the cost of same is already included in our contract price, as is the custom with all vessels built in Great Britain to Lloyd's requirements. Doubtless it would be desirable in addition to the above that an inspecting engineer be sent to Scotland to directly represent the United States Government, but we hardly think it necessary for him to remain there all the time during their construction, but probably only at the commencement of the work and at the preliminary trials when vessels are completed. We do not, therefore, consider that the difference in cost of inspection would represent anything like the amount mentioned by the Maryland Steel Company.

Second. With regard to training of a crew to work the vessels at the Isthmus: If necessary, the experienced leading men we send could remain until such time as the new crew got accustomed to their duties, which, having regard to the experience we have had with vessels of similar type, should not take long.

Third. With regard to the statement made by the Maryland Steel Company that the cost of delivering at Cristobal a dredge built on the Chesapeake "is a matter of very small moment," viz, $2,400, I am of the opinion that there is some mistake in the above figure, because I believe that the cost of delivering at Cristobal a dredge built on the Chesapeake should not be much less than to send a dredge from the Clyde (Scotland) to Cristobal. I may say that our estimate for marine insurance alone for the voyage amounts to over $6,500, and there has to be allowed for in addition the cost of navigation, including crew's wages, coal for voyage, oil, and stores, which makes the sum mentioned by the Maryland Steel Company very inadequate.

Fourth. It is our custom to provide at schedule rates a list of those parts most likely to wear out, and these could be sent with the dredges. Further renewals could either be got from us or in the United States, where they would be made to the detailed drawings provided for under the contract.

I remain, yours, very respectfully.

WM. SIMONS & CO. (LTD.),
WALTER BROWN, Director.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

WASHINGTON, May 8, 1906.

Approximate cost to deliver dredge at Cristobal from Clyde, Scotland.

For crew's wages	$5,000
Coals for voyage, oils, stores, etc	4,000
Marine insurance	6,500
Preparing vessel for voyage after trials	2,500
Total	18,000

For delivery at La Boca the above items will require to be about doubled, making the total price for delivery there $34,020, as already mentioned in our bid.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., Friday, April 20, 1906.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators MILLARD (chairman), KITTREDGE, DRYDEN, HOPKINS, ANKENY, MORGAN, TALIAFERRO, and SIMMONS.

Present, also, Maj. Gen. George W. Davis, United States Army, retired.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, as we have all before us the statement which you have made to the committee during the past two days, I think we are ready to proceed with the questioning. Senator MORGAN, do you wish to take up the questions with the Secretary this morning first?

Senator MORGAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Please proceed, then. We are all ready.

Secretary TAFT. May I introduce something that I omitted from my statement?

Senator MORGAN. Of course; or make any statement that you desire to make, Mr. Secretary.

Secretary TAFT. This is something that I omitted. A clause of this kind occurs on page 2400 of the evidence, the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission of 1904, printed in connection with the testimony of General Davis. [Reading:]

"An important question of policy is yet to be determined. If the Isthmian Canal Commission are not bound by any restriction of Congress as to where they shall purchase machinery, material, and supplies, then it would seem to be their duty to construct the canal as cheaply as possible, and so to buy what they need where they can get it cheapest. This, however, is certain to produce, every time that a large contract is awarded to a foreign manufacturer or dealer, an outcry on the part of the American unsuccessful competitors. If Congress approves the policy of favoring American manufactures and dealers, even if it increases the cost of the construction of the canal, then it seems to me only just that it should declare this policy by law and lay down a rule which the Commission can easily follow."

It is entirely natural that almost everything which is bought should be bought in the United States, provided there is no great discrepancy in the matter of value—I mean, for convenience. Foreign manufacturers do not come in here for contracts unless the profit is considerable; and the advertising is not so general in Europe as it is in this country. But we are constantly confronted with complaints, every time that a foreign manufacturer puts his goods in competition, that we ought to favor American dealers. It should be one way or the other.

Either we ought to limit our bids received to American manufacturers and American merchants who can furnish supplies, or else we ought to make the competition general. My understanding is that it is our duty in conducting affairs here to build this canal as cheaply as we can; and therefore that if Congress says nothing on the subject, that we ought to invite as broad and wide competition as possible. That is the policy that, so far as I have control of the matter, I expect to follow, unless Congress shall relieve the persons who are responsible from that responsibility by laying down a different rule. I omitted to put this in, but it is a very important part of the policy to be pursued, and I suggest to the committee that the question be considered, and if it is thought wise to do nothing, then we understand that the decision is that we are to pursue the course which we have already laid down.

Senator TALIAFERRO. That is, to buy the goods where they can be bought the cheapest?

Secretary TAFT. Of course other considerations may enter into the matter. For instance, in the case of the purchase of the steamships there was the question whether we could sail them under the American flag; and it was thought that, in addition to the other advantages of those steamers, the fact that they were under the American flag was a consideration which justified us in buying them.

Senator TALIAFERRO. I would put it this way: Other things being equal, the policy would be to buy where you could buy the cheapest.

Secretary TAFT. Yes, sir. That is all I desire to add.

Senator MORGAN. It would be practicable, I suppose, to authorize the purchase of American material and manufactures in preference to foreign productions, materials, and manufactures at a rate of discount equal to the percentage of the tariff?

Secretary TAFT. Well, I am not a tariff expert. I do not know how that would work.

Senator MORGAN. I am not either, and that is the reason I think I understand it. [Laughter.]

Senator DRYDEN. I suppose the simplest way would be to regulate it by the question of price and cost to the Government, and of course it would be necessary to take into consideration the facility and rapidity of delivery of the goods. That is a very important matter.

Secretary TAFT. Yes, sir; it is; and the convenience of getting them.

Senator DRYDEN. Yes.

Secretary TAFT. The natural tendency would be, even if you adopted no rule, to take American goods.

Senator DRYDEN. Naturally.

Secretary TAFT. That has been the result, although we have followed generally the rule which I stated. I think about 95 per cent of all that is bought has been bought in the United States. But there are some particular contracts that will invite the attention of foreign governments. I know that, because I am in receipt of communications through the State Department from the ambassadors of the various countries, inquiring as to the form of the advertisement and the bids and when the bids are to be opened.

There is an important letting of bids to be made in the course of a few days—the bids for dredges. I know that the Dutch are making an effort to compete, and I have been advised that the English are. Of course the question of delivery, the question of the probability of prompt delivery, and other matters of that sort might lean the person selecting the bid toward the American bidder, even though he might not be the lowest bidder; but if there was a large difference I am quite sure that the policy would be to accept the foreign bidder, and that is sure to bring to the War Department a great number of communications on the subject in which the statement is made that if we are spending millions of dollars down there we ought to spend it for the benefit of our own citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. We have had some such communications here in regard to this matter. [Laughter.]

Senator DRYDEN. Well, I suppose that within reasonable limits you would favor that policy, naturally?

Secretary TAFT. Of course I would rather have the American get the contract than somebody else, if the American would furnish the goods for the same price.

Senator DRYDEN. Yes.

Secretary TAFT. But the question here is of the duty of an Executive upon whose conduct in that respect there is no limitation.

Senator DRYDEN. Would you prefer to have the matter stand as it is without any action of Congress, or have Congress legislate distinctly upon that point?

Secretary TAFT. I would much prefer to have Congress legislate distinctly.

Senator HOPKINS. What class of goods, or what class of machinery, do you find that the foreigners can furnish cheaper than the Americans?

Secretary TAFT. I am not familiar, Senator, with the prices; but I should think that in the case of dredges, probably, the foreigners could furnish them at a less rate; though it is by no means certain that the dredges which they furnish would be the best dredges. Of course the American facility for getting good machinery, and machinery that will work "up to date," so to speak, is so great that it is quite possible that with respect to that class of goods they would be entitled to the award, at any rate.

Senator HOPKINS. The dredges that you use down there are the character of dredges that we find in use in the United States?

Secretary TAFT. Yes, sir.

Senator HOPKINS. There is no special type that you are having manufactured?

Secretary TAFT. I think not. I think there are some general specifications. I have not examined them with care.

Cement is a very important item. We shall have to use millions of barrels of cement, especially if the lock canal is adopted as the type. We have already, if I recall, purchased some foreign cement, on the ground that we could save $7,000 in the particular contract which we were making.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 12, 1906.

[Memorandum for the Secretary of War.]

1. I have the honor to return herewith the papers which accompanied the memorandum of May 10 from your office on the subject of the Panama Canal dredge bids.

2. The bids were carefully scrutinized by Maj. J. C. Sanford, Corps of Engineers, who has had large experience in dredge design and construction, and his views as to the most desirable bid are contained in the following telegram, dated May 11:

"Referring telephonic conversation with Kutz, think Scotch bid Panama dredges undoubtedly cheaper, everything considered, except duty; understand no duty there on such materials. Learn here that delivery from England of parts ordered about equally prompt as from America. Inspection cost in Scotland little different from cost here, as builders pay Lloyds inspection materials and workmanship. More extra parts should be provided with Scotch make pending making patterns. Maltby wishes to provide part of crew from Panama employees; number unknown. Advantageous to send permanent crew with dredges, but exact value indeterminable. Altogether think Scotch offer cheaper 10 [a] to 8 per cent, increased by shorter time advantage."

3. The great difference between the price named for delivering the Scotch dredge at Colon and the estimated cost of transferring such a dredge from Chesapeake Bay to Colon is partly accounted for by the item of marine insurance—$6,500—included in the former and not in the latter.

4. To make them comparable they must be placed on the same basis, both as to cost of insurance and cost of returning crews to place of construction.

5. While with such adjustment the difference is greatly reduced, it still appears that the estimate of the Maryland Steel Company for this service is too low. In my opinion the chief advantage that would result from an acceptance of the American bids lies in the desirability of having the various auxiliaries of American manufacture, so that they can be readily placed.

6. It is difficult to give a money value to this advantage, but even after allowing most liberally for it there would remain a difference in favor of the bid of William Simons & Co. of between 6 and 8 per cent.

7. I therefore concur in the views expressed by Major Sanford—that the bid of William Simons & Co. as a business proposition is the most desirable one for the Government to accept.

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING,
April 2, 1906.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The inclosed communication from Mr. S. B. Newberry, manager Sandusky Portland Cement Company, Sandusky, Ohio, is self-explanatory, and is referred to you for such attention at the hands of your Department as you may deem proper.

Trusting to be afforded with information that will enable me to make proper reply, I remain,

Very truly, yours,
CHARLES DICK.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

SANDUSKY PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY,
Sandusky, Ohio, March 22, 1906.

DEAR SIR: In the last requisition for bids for Portland cement for the Panama Canal there is no specification that "American" Portland cement is required, and in the last letting English Portland cement, manufactured with English capital and by English labor, was purchased at lower price than American cement, owing to lower freight rates in foreign vessels to Panama.

The manufacturers of Portland cement in the United States represent an investment of over $100,000,000, and produced last year 36,000,000 barrels of Portland cement, a quantity nearly equal to that made in all countries of the world taken together.

We earnestly request that you will use your influence in favor of the adoption of American Portland cement, made at factories built by American capital, and from American materials, and by the aid of American labor in all further work on the Panama Canal.

Very respectfully,

SANDUSKY PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
S. B. NEWBERRY, Manager.

Hon. CHARLES DICK,
United States Senator.

ISTHMIAN CANAL AFFAIRS,
OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION, PANAMA CANAL BUILDING,
Washington, April 5, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Secretary of War, of your letter of the 2d instant, inclosing a communication addressed to you from the manager of the Sandusky Portland Cement Company, of Sandusky, Ohio, with reference to the last purchase of Portland cement by the Isthmian Canal Commission, under date of October 7 last.

When the lot of cement in question was purchased a number of bids were received on American cement and a number also on foreign cement. The lowest bid received on American cement was 37 cents per barrel higher than the lowest bid on foreign cement. After full investigation and test the lowest bid was accepted, and the cement furnished on the contract has proven to be very satisfactory. As the quantity of cement purchased at that time was 20,000 barrels, you will note that this lot of cement would have cost the Commission $7,400 more if the use of foreign cement had been prohibited.

The statements made in the communication inclosed in your letter as to the desirability of purchasing materials needed in the construction of the canal, as far as possible, in the United States are fully appreciated, and where prices have been anything like equal, home concerns have been favored.

I think you will agree, however, that in the case of the lot of cement in question the Commission would not have been justified in paying $7,400 more for American cement than for foreign cement, particularly in view of the fact that there was no doubt as to the quality of the foreign cement being fully equal to that offered by the lowest bidder on American cement.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH BUCKLIN BISHOP,
Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES DICK,
United States Senate.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING,
April 18, 1906.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of recent date, wherein you explain the policy of the Commission in connection with the purchase of materials to be used for construction work, was duly received, and having carefully noted what you say I can not do less than to frankly state my opinion that to favor foreign manufacturers with patronage at the expense of business that should be placed with American firms to the benefit of American labor and industry is not in accord with the spirit which it seems should dominate those in charge of a public enterprise under the auspices of the American Government. Nor does such a course seem justified even by a more or less inconsequential difference in favor of the foreign product as to price when at least a fairly reasonable price is obtainable by requiring competitive bids from American firms.

To put the American manufacturer upon a competitive basis with the foreigner, regardless of those conditions involving cost of labor and material which it may be impossible for him to meet, is to deprive him of that patriotic support and encouragement which he has a right to expect from his home Government, and I can not believe such a policy will receive any material measure of support or indorsement from American citizens, whatever the amount of argument it may be possible to adduce in its favor as a mere matter of saving a few extra dollars, which in any event would and should be spent with our own people whose money will build the canal rather than with those of a foreign country who do not assume any financial responsibility, and yet may receive even greater benefit than ourselves from the international utility of this great undertaking.

Very respectfully,
CHARLES DICK.

Hon. JOSEPH B. BISHOP,
Secretary Isthmian Canal Commission, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 19, 1906.

MY DEAR SENATOR DICK: Mr. Bishop, the secretary of the Isthmian Canal Commission, has handed me your letter of yesterday in which you take exception to the policy of the Commission in regard to the purchase of materials to be used in the construction work on the canal.

I beg to call your attention to page 12 of my letter transmitting the First Annual Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, of date January 12, 1905, which was sent to the Senate by the President and then referred to the Interoceanic Canal Committee. It was also sent to the [a] Probably an error.

House and referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee. In that letter I used the following language:

"An important question of policy is yet to be determined. If the Isthmian Canal Commission are not bound by any restriction of Congress as to where they shall purchase machinery, material, and supplies, then it would seem to be their duty to construct the canal as cheaply as possible, and so to buy what they need where they can get it cheapest. This, however, is certain to produce, every time that a large contract is awarded to a foreign manufacturer or dealer, an outcry on the part of the American unsuccessful competitors. If Congress approves the policy of favoring American manufacturers and dealers, even if it increases the cost of the construction of the canal, then it seems to me only just that it should declare this policy by law and lay down a rule which the Commission can easily follow."

This suggestion to Congress to take some action and change the policy, which was then announced as the necessary policy under the existing law, was made more than fifteen months ago, and Congress has as yet taken no action, apparently willing to allow the policy therein announced to be carried out.

I suggest to you, in your view of the proper policy to pursue, that it might be well for you to introduce a resolution in the Senate embodying your views, in order to bring about action by Congress.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. CHARLES DICK,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 8, 1906.

MY DEAR SENATOR ANKENY: I herewith inclose a resolution in accordance with your suggestion, which, if Congress passes, will secure the result you wish.

I beg to suggest to you, however, that the pressure for the acceptance of the bids already made and opened for dredges is great, because the dredges are needed and have to be constructed, and I must therefore urge that action, if it is to be taken, ought to be taken at once.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. LEVI ANKENY,
United States Senate.

Resolved, etc., That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture unless the President deems the bids therefor to be unreasonable, in which case bids may be invited and contracts awarded for material and equipment of foreign production or manufacture to the extent of the consumption of such articles that may be required in the construction of the said canal.

Mr. CULBERSON. While I have the floor, Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator who has charge of this joint resolution a question with reference to the purchase of these dredges; and that is whether or not it is true that the Isthmian Canal Commission called for bids throughout the world for these two dredges and that, in response to that invitation, which was communicated by the State Department of the United States through its embassies in Europe, the foreign bids were not made; and if, in addition to that, expenses were not incurred on the strength of this invitation by the Government of the United States by persons who made bids, one of them being the lowest bid that was made. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] if what I have said is not substantially true?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not certain about all the details of the statement made by the Senator from Texas, but I understand that substantially what he now states was done.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes. Now I offer the amendment to the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this resolution shall not apply to the purchase of two seagoing suction dredges, bids for which have already been invited and received by the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

So Mr. CULBERSON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I can understand how gentlemen who support the policy of protection can cordially support a resolution like this. Indeed, I can not understand how a Senator who supports the policy of protection could oppose a resolution like this.

For the sake of a clearer understanding of this question throughout the country, I could have wished that the majority would have supported the Administration in its avowed determination to purchase canal supplies wherever they can be purchased most cheaply. A government which possesses the wealth of all the people and which insists upon going into the open markets of the world, where it can purchase its supplies at the lowest cost, would have a difficult task in justifying to its citizens a law which denied them a privilege which it had claimed for itself. But although the political sagacity of the majority in Congress has denied the country an illustration of the effects of the protective tariff, the moral of this resolution will not be entirely lost upon the public mind.

It seems to me that, according to the logic of protection, the easy and certain way to have avoided even the necessity for this joint resolution was simply for the Government to have met these materials at the water's edge and collected a tariff duty. That would have given our American manufacturers a greater advantage than this resolution is expected to give them. It does not lie in the mouth of the advocates of protection to say that if the Government had collected a tariff duty on these imports it would have been taking the money out of one pocket to put it into the other, because we have heard it iterated and reiterated that the foreigner pays the tariff, and therefore, if we had imported these supplies from a foreign country and had collected a duty on them, it would have been, according to their old argument, the foreigner who paid the tax. But our friends on the other side have lived long enough to get beyond that argument, and now they credit the people with too much intelligence to attempt in this day to impose upon them with that argument. So at least we are not without this comfort, that the Republican party admits that the people who purchase supplies do pay the tariff. Not only so, but the Republican party also admits that the disparity in prices between the domestic and the foreign article is so great that it requires a joint resolution of Congress to keep the Republican President of the United States from making purchases in foreign markets.

It seems to me plain that if this difference were slight, ocean freights and insurance would have given the domestic manufacturer a sufficient advantage; but the majority, perceiving that the President intended buying these supplies wherever he could buy them cheapest—I do not know that he was determined or that he had proclaimed his determination to do that, though I have seen a statement to that effect in the public prints—but wholly apart from anything which the newspapers may have published it is an absolute certainty that the majority thought the President would do it, or else they would not have deemed this joint resolution necessary.

So far as I am concerned, I think the majority in adopting this resolution are consistent, if they are not wise. Of course I do not think it could possibly be wise to pursue a policy that is consistent with the protective tariff, but I do think that no advocate of protection could justify himself, either to his own conscience or to the country, if he demanded of the American Government to purchase in cheap markets and denied that same right to the American citizen. Surely it is better to allow the poor to go where they can buy the cheapest than it is to allow the Government, which so long as the people are rich can never itself be without inexhaustible resources, to seek the cheap markets of the Old World.

Before we are through with the next campaign our friends on the other side must not only concede that many articles manufactured in this country may be bought for less in other lands than in this, but they must also concede that this Administration intended to buy them abroad, because the difference in price was such as to tempt it to pursue that course. Gentlemen on the other side have stood here to-day voting down amendment after amendment, when those amendments only proposed to put the American Government on the same basis as foreigners in the purchase of American goods. We first proposed that in making its canal purchases the Government might go into foreign markets and might buy American goods which were offered for sale there at less than the American price.

Mr. President, it is a matter of common knowledge that American goods are sold in foreign markets cheaper than they are at home, and all the minority of the Senate have asked was that whenever an American ware was exposed for sale in any market of the world the American Government might be permitted to buy it at its foreign price. The majority denies the Government that privilege by voting down such an amendment in whatever form it was offered. Surely, Mr. President, when the American commodity has paid the expense of a shipment abroad and then the further expense of a shipment back, that would be advantage enough for the domestic seller; and yet it was believed that at least in some instances the American Government could go into foreign markets and purchase American goods that had once paid ocean freights and the insurance going there and then itself pay the ocean freights and insurance coming back, and still save something for American taxpayers.

I thoroughly agree that a good American would rather buy his goods from an American manufacturer than from a foreigner, but, Mr. President, I confess that my preference for the American manufacturer is confined to those who do not think it wise and proper to sell their goods cheaper to foreigners than to American citizens. I have no patience with American manufacturers who pay ocean freights and insurance upon their goods and then deliver them to the foreigner cheaper than they will deliver those same goods to an American citizen at their own doors. I would rather buy from a foreigner at a fair price than to buy from an American who sells more cheaply to foreigners rather than to his own fellow-citizens. My patriotism only comprehends the men who share it, and whenever an American manufacturer thinks foreigners are entitled to his goods at a cheaper price than American citizens I would invite foreign competition against him and against all of his kind. An American manufacturer is only entitled to a preference in the markets of America when he supplies his countrymen upon terms and prices as favorable as those which he offers to his foreign customers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the resolution pass?

Mr. MONEY. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], leaving the Senator from Tennessee paired with the Senator from Idaho, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I notice that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has not responded to his name. I have already voted. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LATIMER (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. LATIMER. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

And the persons so qualified shall be entitled to be so registered and to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention. Such election for delegates shall be conducted, the returns made, and the certificates of persons elected to such convention issued, as near as may be, in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territories, respectively, regulating elections therein of members of the legislature, save that not more than two judges of each of the election boards holding elections under this act shall be of the same political party: Provided, That the secretary, or other proper officer, of the Territory of Arizona, into whose hands the result of said election in the Territory of Arizona finally comes, shall immediately transmit and certify the same to the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, at Santa Fe. Persons possessing the qualifications entitling them to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention under this act shall be entitled to vote on the ratification or rejection of the constitution submitted to the people of said Territories hereunder, and on the election of all officials whose election is taking place at the same time, under such rules or regulations as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act: Provided, That said registration lists shall answer for both or all such elections.

"SEC. 25. The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color except as to Indians not taxed, and shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State—

"First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship; and that polygamous or plural marriages and the sale, barter, or giving of intoxicating liquors to Indians are forever prohibited.

"Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated and ungranted public lands lying within the boundaries thereof and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes, except as hereinafter provided, and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and such Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands and other property belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands and other property belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use; but nothing herein, or in the ordinance herein provided for, shall preclude the said State from taxing, as other lands and other property are taxed, any lands and other property owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation, but said ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

"Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territory of Arizona and of said Territory of New Mexico shall be assumed and paid by said State, and that said State shall be subrogated to all the rights of indemnity and reimbursement which either of said Territories now has.

"Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control; and that said schools shall always be conducted in English: Provided, That nothing in this act shall preclude the teaching of other languages in said public schools.

"Fifth. That said State shall never enact any law restricting or abridging the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and that ability to read, write, and speak the English language sufficiently well to conduct the duties of the office without the aid of an interpreter shall be a necessary qualification for all State officers.

"Sixth. That the capital of said State shall temporarily be at the city of Santa Fe, in the present Territory of New Mexico, and shall not be changed therefrom previous to anno Domini nineteen hundred and fifteen, but the permanent location of said capital may, after said year, be fixed by the electors of said State, voting at an election to be provided for by the legislature.

"SEC. 26. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said proposed State for its ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the sixth day of November, nineteen hundred and six, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution and for or against any provisions thereof separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made by the election officers direct to the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico at Santa Fe; who, with the governors and chief justices of said Territories, or any four of them, shall meet at said city of Santa Fe on the third Monday after said election and shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question in each of said Territories shall be for the constitution the said canvassing board shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with the statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitution and government of said proposed State are republican in form, and if the provisions in this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, within twenty days from the receipt of the certificate of the result of said election and the statement of the votes cast thereon and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances from said board, to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election, and thereupon the proposed State shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union, under and by virtue of this act, under the name of Arizona, on an equal footing with the original States, from and after the date of said proclamation.

"The original of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances, and the election returns, and a copy of the statement of the votes cast at said election shall be forwarded and turned over by the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to the State authorities.

"SEC. 27. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said State shall be entitled to two Representatives in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representatives, together with the governor and other officers provided for in said constitution, and also all other State and county officers, shall be elected on the same day of the election for the adoption of the constitution; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of the constitution, and the State is admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers of said Territories, respectively, including Delegates to Congress, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in said Territories until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

"SEC. 28. That upon the admission of said State into the Union there is hereby granted unto it, including the sections thereof heretofore granted, four sections of public land in each township in the proposed State for the support of free public nonsectarian common schools, to wit: Sections numbered thirteen, sixteen, thirty-three, and thirty-six, and where such sections or any parts thereof have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter section and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken; such indemnity lands to be selected within said respective portions of said State in the manner provided in this act: Provided, That the thirteenth, sixteenth, thirty-third, and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not at any time be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, but other lands equivalent thereto may be selected for such school purposes in lieu thereof; nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grants of this act, but such reservation lands shall be subject to the indemnity provision of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall repeal or affect any act of Congress relating to the Casa Grande Ruin as now defined or as may be hereafter defined or extended, or the power of the United States over it, or any other lands embraced in the State hereafter set aside by Congress as a national park, game preserve, or for the preservation of objects of archæological or ethnological interest; and nothing contained in this act shall interfere with the rights and ownership of the United States in any land hereafter set aside by Congress as national park, game preserve, or other reservation, or in the said Casa Grande Ruin as it now is or may be hereafter defined or extended by law, but exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, shall be exercised by the United States, which shall have exclusive control and jurisdiction over the same; but nothing in this proviso contained shall be construed to prevent the service within said Casa Grande Ruin, or national parks, game preserves, and other reservations hereafter established by law, of civil and criminal processes lawfully issued by the authority of said State; and said lands shall not be subject at any time to the school grants of this act that may be embraced within the metes and bounds of the national park, game preserve, and other reservation, or the said Casa Grande Ruin, as now defined or may be hereafter defined; but other lands equivalent thereto may be selected for such school purposes hereinbefore provided in lieu thereof.

"SEC. 29. That three hundred sections of the unappropriated nonmineral public lands within said State, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions, as provided in this act, are hereby granted to said State for the purpose of erecting legislative, executive, and judicial public buildings in the same, and for the payment of the bonds heretofore or hereafter issued therefor.

"SEC. 30. That the lands granted to the Territory of Arizona by the act of February eighteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, entitled 'An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes,' are hereby vested in the proposed State to the extent of the full quantity of seventy-five sections, and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by said Territory of Arizona may be selected by the said State. In addition to the foregoing, and in addition to all lands heretofore granted for such purpose, there shall be, and hereby is, granted to said State, to take effect when the same is admitted to the Union, three hundred sections of land, to be selected from the public domain within said State in the same manner as provided in this act, and the proceeds of all such lands shall constitute a permanent fund, to be safely invested and held by said State, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said State, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university.

"SEC. 31. That nothing in this act shall be so construed, except where the same is so specifically stated, as to repeal any grant of land heretofore made by any act of Congress to either of said Territories, but such grants are hereby ratified and confirmed in and to said State, and all of the land that may not, at the time of the admission of said State into the Union, have been selected and segregated from the public domain, may be so selected and segregated in the manner provided in this act.

"SEC. 32. That five per centum of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said State which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said State. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of five million dollars for the use and benefit of the common schools of said State. Said appropriation shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States at such time and to such person or persons as may be authorized by said State to receive the same under laws to be enacted by said State, and until said State shall enact such laws said appropriation shall not be paid. Said appropriation of five million dollars shall be held inviolable and invested by said State, in trust, for the use and benefit of said schools.

"SEC. 33. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes may be appraised and disposed of only at public sale, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the income from which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than ten years, and such common school land shall not be subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

"SEC. 34. Mr. FORAKER subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that while I was out of the Chamber a few minutes ago, having been called out by some one who wanted to see me, the conference report on the statehood bill was presented. I understand in a general way what the conference report is, and I wish now to give notice that at the proper time I shall make a motion that the Senate disagree to the report and that the conferees be instructed to insist upon the Senate amendments.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to submit the report of the conference committee of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I ask that the report be printed and that the bill as it will stand amended if the conference report is agreed to be printed, so that each Senator may have on his desk the law as it will be if it should be approved by both Houses and signed by the President.

Mr. SPOONER. That is, as proposed to be amended by the conferees?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; the agreement that we have reached as it will be ratified if the Senate chooses to ratify it—in other words, to have every Senator have it on his desk instead of having me or some one else try to explain what has been done.

Mr. SPOONER. With the amendments printed in italics?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. I ask that the amendments be printed in italics, and that the amendments to the amendments, or the changes that have been made by the conferees, be printed in roman.

Mr. KEAN. And the numbers of the amendments.

Mr. TILLMAN. The numbers to be the same as they are now.

Mr. HALE. That will show where the conference committee have introduced entirely new matter?

Mr. TILLMAN. Everything of that sort. We have only added matter in two or three places, and explanation will be made when the proper time comes as to why we thought it was necessary to do so.

SATURDAY, June 2, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 180, noes 37.

So the motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 18030) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, with Senate amendments, which were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to noncurring in the Senate amendments, and asking for a conference?

Mr. BARTLETT. I object to unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to unanimous consent that they may be considered at this time, on a motion to nonconcur, and send the amendments in gross to a conference?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to ask unanimous consent. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the rules, this bill, having come back to the House from the Senate with amendments made by the Senate, those amendments containing additional appropriations than those made by the House, the bill would ordinarily go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. If the amendments to the bill are germane and additional matter, automatically it would go to the Committee on Military Affairs; if, however, the amendments that are germane merely change the amounts, then it would not.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that where it simply increases or diminishes the amount that the House provided for the particular matter in the House heretofore, it would not be necessary.

The SPEAKER. If there are original amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand there are several original amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under that impression; and, of course, it could not be taken from the Speaker's table except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the reason I made the inquiry. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, under the rules.

NATURALIZATION.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15442—the naturalization bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naturalization bill, indicated by the gentleman.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 201, noes 37.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Forty-two; not a sufficient number.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The other side will rise. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-eight; not a sufficient number.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Forty-one have arisen; a sufficient number. Tellers are ordered. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] will take their places as tellers.

The House again proceeded to divide.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Tellers will suspend.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to ask for tellers upon going into Committee of the Whole, and I understood the Speaker to put it so.

The SPEAKER. What did the gentleman from Missouri demand tellers on?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I demanded it on the last motion I made.

The SPEAKER. On the yeas and nays?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not make a speech on it; it is not the practice to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. One moment. What does the gentleman now ask?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood. Tellers will cease this division, and the vote will be taken de novo.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Tellers will cease the count, and the vote will be taken de novo.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry. How does it happen that Members have got the right to come back and be counted on the other side after having voted on my side?

The SPEAKER. The vote by tellers is under the jurisdiction of the Chair, and the gentleman having made his request, as he himself states, in simple fairness to the House, if there was a vote under a mistake, it should be taken de novo. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will pass between the tellers, and the tellers will pay no regard to the vote already taken, but the vote will be taken over.

The question being taken, the tellers reported ayes 61 on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. As many as favor the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naturalization bill will, as their names are called, vote "aye," those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 14, answered "present" 18, not voting 126, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. WILLIAMS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15442) to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, with Mr. CUMMER in the chair.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I think we had reached section 5. I ask that the Clerk read section 5, and I will call attention to the fact that we were reading the bill by sections and not by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That an alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner and not otherwise:

First. He shall declare on oath before the clerk of any court authorized by this act to naturalize aliens, or his authorized deputy, in the district in which such alien resides, two years at least prior to his admission, and after he has reached the age of eighteen years, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly, by name, to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which the alien may be at the time a citizen or subject. And such declaration shall set forth the name, age, occupation, personal description, place of birth, last foreign residence and allegiance, the date of arrival, the name of the vessel, if any, in which he came to the United States, and the present place of residence in the United States of said alien.

Second. Not less than two years nor more than five years after he has made such declaration of intention he shall make and file, in duplicate, a petition in writing, signed by the applicant in his own handwriting and duly verified, in which petition such applicant shall state his full name, his place of residence (by street and number, if possible), his occupation, and, if possible, the date and place of his birth; the place from which he emigrated, and the date and place of his arrival in the United States, and, if he entered through a port, the name of the vessel on which he arrived; the time when and the place and name of the court where he declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; if he is married he shall state the name of his wife, and, if possible, the country of her nativity and her place of residence at the time of filing his petition; and if he has children, the name, date, and place of birth and place of residence of each child living at the time of the filing of his petition.

The petition shall set forth that he is not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government, or a member of or affiliated with any organization or body of persons teaching disbelief in or opposed to organized government, a polygamist or believer in polygamy, and that it is his intention to become a citizen of the United States and to renounce absolutely and forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he at the time of filing of his petition may be a citizen or subject, and that it is his intention to reside permanently within the United States, and whether or not he has been denied admission as a citizen of the United States, and, if denied, the ground or grounds of such denial, the court or courts in which such decision was rendered, and that the cause for such denial has since been cured or removed, and every fact material to his naturalization and required to be proved upon the final hearing of his application.

The petition shall also be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, who are citizens of the United States, and who shall state in their affidavits that they have personally known the applicant to be a resident of the United States for a period of at least five years continuously, and of the State, Territory, or district in which the application is made for a period of at least one year immediately preceding the date of the filing of his petition, and that they each have personal knowledge that the petitioner is a person of good moral character, and that he is in every way qualified, in their opinion, to be admitted as a citizen of the United States.

At the time of filing his petition there shall be filed with the clerk of the court a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, if the petitioner arrived in the United States since January 1, 1900, stating the date, place, and manner of his arrival in the United States, and the declaration of intention of such petitioner, which certificate and declaration shall be attached to and made a part of said petition.

Third. He shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounces and abjures all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject; that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

Fourth. It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States five years at least, and within the State or Territory where such court is at the time held one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. In addition to the oath of the applicant, the testimony of at least two witnesses, citizens of the United States, as to the facts of residence, moral character, and attachment to the principles of the Constitution, shall be required, and the name, place of residence, and occupation of each witness shall be set forth in the record.

Fifth. In case the alien applying to be admitted to citizenship has borne any hereditary title, or has been of any of the orders of nobility in the kingdom or state from which he came, he shall, in addition to the above requisites, make an express renunciation of his title or order of nobility in the court to which his application is made, and his renunciation shall be recorded in the court.

Sixth. When any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments, which I wish to offer on behalf of the committee, and which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, page 4, after the word "alien," insert the following words: "Provided, however, That no alien who, in conformity with the law in force at the date of his declaration, has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be required to renew such declaration."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 21, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 12, after the word "petition," insert the following words: "Provided, That if he has filed his declaration before the passage of this act he shall not be required to sign the petition in his own handwriting."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 19, after the word "petitioner," strike out "arrived in the United States since January 1, 1900," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "arrives in the United States after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, those are all of the amendments that the committee has to offer to this particular section of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5, page 4, insert the following words: "Except as provided in section 2172, Revised Statutes of the United States."

[Mr. STEENERSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman intends to confine himself to this particular amendment under consideration, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BONYNGE. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman whether he desires more time to discuss his first amendment or some other amendment which he desires to offer later?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say I do not think the gentleman can control my remarks.

Mr. BONYNGE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can speak on the subject when I reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STEENERSON) there were—ayes 16, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in regard to this proposition in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in line 7, page 9, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that section has not yet been read. That is the sixth section, and we are now considering section 5.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 23, I move to strike out the words "in duplicate."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if I am correctly informed, the purpose of this language is to compel an alien intending to file a declaration of intention to become a citizen to make, in his own handwriting, two petitions to be filed with the clerk of the court, and by a later section the clerk of the court is required to file one of those petitions with the Bureau of Naturalization. I ask the gentleman from Colorado if that be true?

Mr. BONYNGE. One of them is sent on to the Bureau, but he does not have to write the whole petition. He simply signs it in his own handwriting. There will be printed blanks, and all that is required of the alien is that he sign his name twice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this petition to be filed in the Bureau of Immigration in Washington? Is it the purpose to have the investigation conducted from the Bureau previous to the final action of the court?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly. That is the object and purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I imagined. That is why I moved to strike this language out. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if this provision be continued it will result in the building up of a tremendous bureau here in Washington. In the city of New York, for instance, every year there are from 10,000 to 20,000 applications for citizenship filed in the courts that have jurisdiction of naturalization cases. I suppose that a large number of applications are filed throughout the country, and all of these applications will be filed in Washington. The Bureau here is to conduct an independent investigation of all of these applications for citizenship. If the law be enacted in that way it will require a very large force to make these investigations. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that such a provision is unnecessary.

The last day that this bill was under consideration the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] stated that in all his experience he had never known but one applicant for citizenship to be rejected. I have here the statistics furnished by the commissioner of naturalization for the eastern district of New York, which embraces the former city of Brooklyn and that portion of the State of New York contained on Long Island. From the 16th of June to the 31st of December, 1903, 2,754 petitions were granted, and 868 petitions were denied—24 per cent of the total number of applicants. In the year 1904 6,910 petitions were granted, 3,348 petitions were denied—32 per cent of the applicants for citizenship. In 1905 5,316 petitions were granted, 2,165 petitions were denied, or 28—almost 29—per cent of the total number of applicants. And in this present year, including the month of April—four months—2,143 petitions were granted, and 1,143 petitions were denied—34 per cent of the applicants in that time.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the gentleman will permit me in this connection, I will state that the statistics of the United States court at Pittsburg show almost the same percentage of applicants rejected by the United States court at that place.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed that the number of rejections in the southern district of New York, which embraces the former city of New York, the boroughs of Manhattan, Richmond, and the Bronx, and some little additional territory, perhaps, are relatively about the same. Evidently these courts are effectively doing this work. Now, if this language "in duplicate" is retained in the bill, and the later provision requiring an independent investigation by the Bureau of Immigration at Washington of all applications filed for citizenship throughout the United States, the committee will readily understand that it will require an enormous force to make these independent investigations. It seems to me that it has hardly been brought to the attention of the Members that it is the purpose to establish this great force in Washington, or, originating in Washington, to investigate the petitions filed in the several courts. If this investigation is to be authorized, of what use is it to have the investigation by the courts themselves upon these applicants for citizenship? I am in favor of as strict a compliance with the law as possible, but I doubt whether it is necessary to have this duplication of work.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to ask the gentleman if the striking out of these words and the subsequent words to which he refers is not exactly in line with the amendment which the committee has already adopted in striking out section 4? Section 4 provided for the examination of the conduct of the court. We have stricken that all out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to that fact. It is. For instance, certain State courts under this bill have jurisdiction of applications for naturalization, and before these courts act upon the applications filed in the court it is the intention of this bill to have the Bureau of Naturalization at Washington make an independent investigation.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman misunderstands the purpose when he says that it is necessary that there shall be an independent investigation in each case. The object and purpose of having this record sent to Washington is that there may be one central place where a record in all these cases may be kept, so that if there should be anything appearing in the record in this one central bureau that required an investigation, then the Department can call upon the United States district attorney in the proper district and give him information when he appears in opposition to the application before the court, and it is not for the purpose of having a large force in Washington investigating all these cases and sending them all over the country. It is simply permissive to have this bureau, and in line upon the recommendations of three Presidents of the United States for a central bureau, where the record of all these naturalization proceedings shall be kept.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My experience has been that if you make some duty permissive upon some bureau or Department of this Government a way will be found by which the necessary funds will be obtained to do everything possible under the permission given under the law. It seems to me that it would be easy to place upon the United States district attorney of the respective districts where these applications are made the duty of making any independent investigation necessary, and I hope the committee will adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, the question as suggested by the argument of the gentleman from New York is a very important one that concerns a very vital portion of this bill. If the argument of the gentleman from New York shall prevail, and we are to do away with this bureau, thereby one of the great reforms that it is hoped to accomplish by the passage of this bill will be absolutely defeated. This proposition, Mr. Chairman, providing for the establishment of a central and national bureau having control of naturalization, is not a new proposition. It has been submitted to Congress by three Presidents of the United States, and I desire to call the attention of the committee to what these different Presidents have said. In his annual message of 1884 President Arthur said:

> It might be wise to provide for a central bureau of registry, wherein should be filed or concentrated transcripts of every record of naturalization in the several Federal and State courts, and to make provision also for the vacation or cancellation of such record in cases where fraud has been practiced upon the court by the applicant himself or where he had renounced or forfeited his acquired citizenship.

President Cleveland said in his first annual message of 1885:

> I regard with favor the suggestion put forth by one of my predecessors—that provision be made for a central bureau of record of the decrees of naturalization granted by the various courts throughout the United States now invested with that power.

President Roosevelt in his message of 1904 said:

> The courts should be required to make returns to the Secretary of State at stated periods of all naturalizations conferred.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BONYNGE. I yield first to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the gentleman from Colorado or the committee made any estimate of the number of clerks that will be added to the Bureau of Immigration by reason of the provisions of this act?

Mr. BONYNGE. Not by number. We have appropriated in this bill $100,000, and the naturalization fees will cover what will be required.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman think $100,000 will cover the expense that will be entailed by the addition to the force of the number of men required?

Mr. BONYNGE. I think it will more than cover it. Now, to proceed with what I was about to say——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not suffice if the records of the court of these applicants were filed with the Bureau?

Mr. BONYNGE. Not at all, Mr. Chairman, for this reason: It is provided in this section of the bill that the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization shall keep—as has been done since 1900—a complete record of every alien arriving in the United States, keeping the date of his arrival, together with his description, and the vessel by which he came, if he came by a vessel. That has been done since 1900, and it is provided now by this bill that it shall continue to be done. Now, this bill provides that all aliens shall be furnished with a certificate to that effect. The object and purpose of having these petitions sent to Washington is that they shall set forth the date of his arrival, a description of the man, and all the information relative to him shall be carried in the records of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization at Washington. The district attorney can not have that information except by corresponding with the Bureau at Washington. Having a record of the petition in each case here in the Bureau at Washington, the Bureau will, by simply referring to its record—it does not require an army of clerks to do so—ascertain whether or not the statements in the petition agree with the records of the Bureau. If it does agree, that is an end of it; if it does not agree with that on file in the Bureau, then the Bureau will communicate with the district attorney of the particular district and give him such information as will enable him when the applicant appears in court to properly cross-examine him. It is done not to work any hardship upon those applying for naturalization, but in order to safeguard and protect the interests of the United States in admitting aliens to citizenship——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BONYNGE (continuing). And to see that those who make application comply with the requirements of the law before they are admitted to citizenship. I can not conceive, Mr. Chairman, why anyone upon either side of the House, or from any section of the country, should oppose a provision which imposes no hardship upon the applicant, but simply safeguards and protects the United States in seeing that no one receives a naturalization certificate until he has complied with the laws of the country whose citizenship he is seeking.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and members of this committee, that I feel certain that if you had gone over the records and knew the large number of naturalization frauds that have been committed throughout the United States, there would not be a Member upon the floor of this House who would not join with us in this attempt to perfect our naturalization laws. The demand has existed for a number of decades. No general revision of our naturalization laws has been had since 1802. Every true American, naturalized or native-born, will, I am sure, join with us in the effort to guard and protect the citizenship of the United States from the gross frauds that have disgraced the administration of our naturalization laws. [Applause.] That is the object and purpose of this bill, and I hope you will rally to the support of the committee in this vital part of the measure and settle it once for all, in order that we may proceed with this bill and secure, if possible, its passage to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Colorado seems to infer that I have some desire to emasculate this bill. My only purpose is to perfect it so that I may be able to support it. The fact is that when an alien files a petition for naturalization, he must to-day produce a certificate from the Bureau of Immigration——

Mr. BONYNGE. No; he does not have to do that to-day.

Mr. PALMER. He will have to do it under this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. First, I will state my position and then I will go on. He must produce a certificate to-day showing when he arrived and verifying the facts of his petition. Now, I have here a letter signed by William Williams, commissioner of the Immigration Service, formerly located at Ellis Island, New York, in reply to a request from an applicant for citizenship for such a certificate. It is dated January 28, 1905, and he says:

> I regret to have to advise you, in answer to your request for verification of your landing here June 8, 1892, that this can not be done, owing to the unfortunate destruction of all the old immigration records in possession of the Government in the Ellis Island fire of June 14, 1897.

This is a man with whom I am personally acquainted, who applied for naturalization. When he came to get his final papers the United States district court for the eastern district of New York required that he should produce a certificate from the Bureau of Immigration verifying the statements in his petition as to when he landed and the ship on which he came and the other information of which a record is kept. He applied to the Bureau to obtain the certificate for that purpose, with the result which I have stated. This shows that that is the practice to-day in the Federal court.

Mr. BONYNGE. In your court only.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not make it in every court?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is the object of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make the courts require the production of a certificate, and that would do away with the necessity of filing a duplicate in the Department at Washington with every petition filed in any court having jurisdiction of naturalization. That is unnecessary. The same result can be accomplished by compelling the applicant for citizenship, before final action is taken, to have the court pass upon the question whether the facts stated in the petition correspond with the facts stated in the certificate. And as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] said, this bill provides that such a certificate must be filed with every petition, and it becomes part of the petition.

The gentleman says the bill makes it permissive for the Bureau in Washington to investigate every single application for citizenship. I repeat, if you make it permissive, if you give the power to do it, the Bureau will without doubt investigate every application that is filed. For the reason that it is unnecessary, that it does not accomplish any useful purpose, that it means the building up of a great and unnecessary force, I hope that these provisions will be taken from the bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question, I move to strike out the last two words. I understand the proposition of the chairman of this committee is that the reason why this duplicate petition should be filed in the Bureau in Washington is to enable the clerks here to make a comparison, to see whether or not the man is genuine or a fraud. It is provided on the sixth page, beginning in the seventeenth line, that at the time of filing his petition he shall also file with the clerk of the court a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, if the petitioner arrived in the United States since January 1, 1900, stating the date, place, and manner of his arrival.

He must file that with his petition, and, under the statement of the chairman of the committee, all the clerks in Washington would have to do would be to find out whether or not the certificate that he filed with his petition corresponds with the certificate which they have here in their department. It seems to me the provision is entirely unnecessary. In the first place, when a man files his petition he must file a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, showing when he arrived, and all about himself. Having filed that, there can be no purpose and no good in having anybody here in Washington compare his petition and his certificate with the original record.

It will only duplicate the expense, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has properly said. It will take an army of clerks to examine every petition, and while everybody, I suppose, is in favor of preventing fraudulent naturalizations, it is not worth while to put the United States Government to this extraordinary expense for nothing.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, I would like to have the gentleman from Colorado answer my question.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am not aware that the gentleman has asked any question. I have listened with pleasure to the gentleman's remarks, but I do not recall that the gentleman had submitted any question.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, yes; I did. I submitted a question as to whether there is anything to be done except for the clerk to compare the papers.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am very glad to answer the question. I did not understand the gentleman. Certainly, there is more than that to be done. When a man files his petition and he states in the petition that he has lived in the United States continuously for five years, and it goes to Washington, if the Department learns that he has not been living here it would communicate that fact to the United States attorney, or if they get information from the country from which he emigrated that he did not maintain a good moral character——

Mr. PALMER. If who gets information?

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, the Department at Washington. If they have any reason to believe there is any good reason why the applicant should not be admitted to citizenship, whether they obtain that information from the State Department or any other Department, it will be the duty of the Bureau of Naturalization to advise the United States attorney, so that he may properly examine the applicant. Would the gentleman be opposed to having the district attorney of his district furnished with all information that might show that an applicant for naturalization was unfitted for naturalization? Will the gentleman favor me with an answer to that question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly I would not be opposed to any such thing as that.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is the object of this provision of the bill. It is to give the district attorney that information. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, wait a minute. There is no hurry about this. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee another question. I would like to know what there would be on the face of the papers that are sent up here from all the courts throughout the United States that would arouse the suspicion of the officers here in Washington as to the character of any aliens?

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, he will have his information stated in the petition as to where he has been living—all these facts, called for by this petition. They keep the entire record in reference to the man.

Mr. PALMER. He has to file with his petition a certified copy of the record, showing the time when he came to the United States.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. That is all they have got here in Washington and all they can possibly do is to compare one paper with the other.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; this provision requires that the petition shall also be sent to Washington.

Mr. PALMER. What good does it do to send a petition to Washington except to compare it with the original record to see whether he is a fraudulent or a true person?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is one of the objects of it, so that they can make that comparison.

Mr. PALMER. He files with his petition a certificate from the record, showing when he arrived and all about himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I refer now to page 4, line 21, wherein the bill states, "not less than two years nor more than five."

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I would state that that has been amended so as to read seven years.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Do I understand that under the provisions of this bill as amended if seven years have elapsed since the first application or declaration was filed, that the applicant can not then be naturalized?

Mr. BONYNGE. He can start all over again.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Well, must he?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; and I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of State has urged this provision most strongly, because of international complications that have frequently arisen. I desire now to read, for the information of the gentleman and for the information of others, a letter addressed by the Secretary of State, Mr. Elihu Root—who is not only a great Secretary of State, but who is recognized as one of the very ablest lawyers in the country—which he wrote to Mr. HOWELL, of date February 27, 1906. It is as follows:

> The Department has received a copy of the bill (H. R. 15442) to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization, etc., introduced in the House of Representatives by you February 22, 1906, and I have had it carefully examined to ascertain if its provisions are such that they would probably provide a remedy for those evils in the matter of the naturalization of aliens which the Department has called to the attention of Congress on several occasions.
> I am gratified to be able to say that those who have examined the bill think that if it were enacted into law it would work a great improvement in the granting of citizenship. They think, however, that it would be improved by slight amendments.
> First. Section 5 provides that an alien shall make a declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States at least two years prior to his admission, and that he shall file the petition for final naturalization not more than five years after making the declaration, that the declaration of intention shall have a life of not more than five years. It is suggested that section 29 be so amended as to require that the certificate of declaration of intention set forth that the document is not valid after five years from the date of its issuance.

Now, the Secretary did not suggest the amendment from five to seven years, and I am pleased to accord the originality of that suggestion to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, and to express, as I pass, Mr. Chairman, not only my high personal regard and esteem for the gentleman, but likewise to express my extreme regret that the committee did not have the benefit of the gentleman's very great ability in the preparation of this bill, because if we had I know it would have been so perfect that even the enlightened judgment of the 385 other Members of the House could not have improved it in the slightest particular. [Applause.] Now, returning, Mr. Chairman, to the letter I was reading——

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to express my profound thanks for the very hearty compliment that has been paid me, but I desire to demand an answer to this question, if it would not——

Mr. BONYNGE. I decline to answer any demand, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEENERSON. I withdraw the word "demand," and I was only using it with a pleasant intention. I will most politely ask if it was not due to my initiative that the committee finally agreed that the educational qualifications, so called, should not apply——

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, we have not reached that section of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe——

Mr. BONYNGE. I decline to yield further. I now desire to read this letter in answering the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am answering an interrogatory from another gentleman, and I can not answer two at the same time.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will wait.

Mr. BONYNGE (reading)—

The Department constantly receives applications for passports from persons who have made the declaration of intention many years ago and have supposed the certificate to be sufficient evidence of their citizenship. Occasionally such documents are presented to our diplomatic and consular officers abroad. It would seem to be desirable that the person who makes the declaration of intention should not be led into error and should not be able to lead anyone else into error on the vital subject of its validity.

Now, it appears from the Secretary of State——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. I object, unless the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five or six or any number of words, in order to put a question to the gentleman having charge of the bill. I understand from the letter just read by the gentleman having charge of the bill that the Secretary of State made reference to the phrase on page 4, lines 8 and 9, which says, "two years at least prior to his admission." I would like to inquire what the word "admission" refers to in that connection?

Mr. BONYNGE. Admission to citizenship in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the wording on page 7, beginning in line 12, which says, "It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship that immediately preceding the date of his application." Does that mean application by declaration, or application to the court for citizenship, or——

Mr. BONYNGE. Application to the court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or the filing of the petition for citizenship?

Mr. BONYNGE. The same thing—application for admission to citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, all pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado if this bill becomes a law will any certificate be granted to the declarant who has made his declaration of intention or will that declaration simply be embodied in the court record?

Mr. BONYNGE. Is your question whether it affects existing declarations of intention?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. No; I am speaking now of those filed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BONYNGE. There will be two declarations of intention, and the applicant will have one and the other will be kept by the court.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Just the same as in the case of the petition?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes, sir; well, I could not say just the same as the petition, because the petitioner does not keep one copy. The court has one and the other comes to the Bureau at Washington.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Is there any provision in the bill providing for such a case as the loss or destruction of certificates of declaration of intention?

Mr. BONYNGE. My own opinion is that section 882 of the Revised Statutes will cover certified copies in all cases, but some gentlemen think it will not, and there is an amendment which is to be offered providing that certified copies may be had in all cases. And I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we welcome any amendment that perfects the bill, exactly as we were glad to accept the idea suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] and to frame an amendment in accordance therewith.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the clerk of the court shall, immediately after filing the petition, give notice thereof by posting in a public and conspicuous place in his office, or in the building in which his office is situated, under an appropriate heading, the name, nativity, and residence of the alien, the date and place of his arrival in the United States, and the date, as nearly as may be, for the final hearing of his petition, and the names of the witnesses whom the applicant expects to summon in his behalf; and the clerk shall, if the applicant requests it, issue a subpœna for the witnesses so named by the said applicant to appear upon the day set for the final hearing, but in case such witnesses can not be produced upon the final hearing other witnesses may be summoned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. I know the gentleman has already explained the procedure in reference to the application, but can he state it in just a few words again?

Mr. BONYNGE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. What was the question?

Mr. MANN. Under the procedure provided for in the bill for obtaining final papers—in just a few words. I do not wish to detain the committee.

Mr. BONYNGE. The applicant files a petition, in which he sets forth the facts entitling him to naturalization, and it is filed with the court. One copy of that comes to Washington and one copy is kept by the clerk of the court. After ninety days have elapsed, there is a hearing in court to ascertain whether or not he is entitled to naturalization.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That petitions for naturalization may be made and filed during term time or vacation of the court and shall be docketed the same day as filed, but final action thereon shall be had only on stated days, to be fixed by rule of the court, and in no case shall final action be had upon a petition until at least ninety days have elapsed after filing and posting the notice of such petition: Provided, That no person shall be naturalized nor shall any certificate of naturalization be issued by any court within thirty days preceding the holding of any general election within its territorial jurisdiction.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 9, line 4, to strike out the word "ninety" and substitute "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers and amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 4, strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, under this bill, after the petition is filed, the final order may not be made until ninety days. In another provision of the bill an appeal may be taken within forty-five days after the date of the final order. Another part of the bill provides that no certificate of naturalization may be granted within thirty days of a general election.

Now, I assume that after a petition is filed the court would not make the final order until the last of the ninety days, and the appeal in many cases would not be entered until the last of the forty-five days limited by law. In that manner one hundred and thirty-five days would have elapsed between the filing of the petition and the entry of the appeal. No time is limited in the bill for the decision of the appeal, and, obviously, no time could be, but it is fair to assume that the higher court would not decide the appeal for at least thirty days. If we add those to the previous one hundred and thirty-five days we have one hundred and sixty-five days after the filing of the original petition. Now, then, as in most States no man may be registered within fourteen days of the time of the election, that adds additional time. I do not believe that anyone will object to allowing sufficient time to make a full examination of all the facts which are necessary to determine whether a petitioner is getting naturalized properly or fraudently, but it seems to me that the ninety days might well be cut down to thirty days, and that the time for entering the appeal might be limited to thirty days. That would give sixty days within which the Government could investigate.

Now, when the alien comes here in the first instance a complete description of him is entered upon the records and forwarded to the Bureau of Immigration, and later, when he makes his declaration of intention, that, too, is filed and placed upon the records of the court, and the officers of the court passing upon his petition for naturalization must have recourse to the records of the court which received his original declaration; and they have a perfect means of determining whether any fraud is attempted to be practiced upon the United States Government. They have ample means, because they have recourse to the records which were made at the time the alien landed upon our shores. With those facts in their possession it seems to me that the long period of ninety days serves no useful purpose, because the Government in the shorter period could make all the examination which would be necessary, and the longer period serves, therefore, to postpone that day upon which the alien may become a full-fledged citizen of the United States.

I appreciate every effort that is made to purge our citizenship of all bad men, but there is no reason for keeping out good men or postponing the day when good men may become citizens of the United States. And I respectfully urge this upon the attention of the committee, and ask that this amendment be accepted.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will say that I heartily agree with him in the statement that we do not desire to keep out any who are worthy of our citizenship. The object and purpose of this amendment is simply to give the United States an opportunity to make a thorough investigation as to the qualifications of the applicants for admission to its citizenship. The gentleman from Massachusetts has taken the extreme case, a very extreme case. This provision for delay in the issuing of a certificate for forty-five days is only required in those cases where the district attorney of the United States has appeared in opposition to granting the application. I presume it will be safe to say that in 90 per cent of the cases there will be no opposition to granting the application and that the petitions will be granted within ninety days. Where, however, there has been reason to believe that opposition should be made by the Government of the United States to the granting of an application, on the ground that the applicant is not worthy for any reason—and it makes no difference what the particular objection may be—then it is no hardship to that individual if in that particular case he has to wait forty-five days until the Government has an opportunity to determine whether or not it desires to appeal. It is not only in the courts of Boston, which are six or eight hours from Washington, where naturalization under this bill will be carried on, but in the courts in California, in Hawaii, courts in all the Territories and in every State of the Union are authorized by this bill to grant naturalization. They have to communicate with the Department at Washington; the Department at Washington may, perhaps, in some extreme case be required to communicate with some foreign government. Ninety days is not too long to give the Government an opportunity to post itself as to the qualifications of the applicant, and it is no hardship to the applicant if he should wait the ninety days. I say to the gentleman—and I know he will agree with me—that when an applicant is applying for what I believe the most priceless boon to be given to man—American citizenship—it is no hardship to him to have his qualifications examined by the Government, and that the Government should have ample opportunity to make that examination thorough in every respect. These various courts are permitted to naturalize aliens not for the benefit of the Government, but for the convenience of the applicants. I submit, therefore, that the time is none too long, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be voted down.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What cases of application are those in which it is expected the Government will appear in opposition to naturalization? Where citizenship has already been granted?

Mr. BONYNGE. In any case where the Department at Washington has reason to believe that the man is not entitled to citizenship; in a case, for instance, where the applicant applies for citizenship where the record shows that he has not lived in the country long enough; or, where a man represents himself to be a certain individual, is applying for naturalization under some fraudulent or false name, and many others that might be given and which will probably occur to the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it reasonable to believe that the Government would appear in opposition in more than 10 per cent?

Mr. BONYNGE. I think it would not be. It would only be in exceptional cases, I would say to the gentleman from New York. I think if this bill is enacted there will be very few fraudulent applications. Of course there have been a large number of fraudulent certificates issued, and in the past the number of cases in which the Government ought to have intervened would exceed 10 per cent; but with the safeguards against fraudulent applications and fraudulent certificates provided by the terms of this bill, I am certain that the number of cases in which it would be necessary for the Government to intervene will be greatly diminished. The provisions of this bill, allowing investigations relative to the qualifications of all applicants, will, if enacted into law, deter those not entitled under our laws to naturalization from making application therefor. The cases will therefore, in my judgment, be comparatively few in which it will be necessary for the Government to appear.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massacusetts. I move to strike out the last word.

The trouble with this provision, Mr. Chairman, is that it not only deals with the certificates of the men who are not entitled to them by reason of some fraud they are attempting to practice, but applies to every petition. Under the terms of this bill, a court can not make a final order until ninety days after the filing of the petition. Now, in each case the object is to get an exact description of the petitioner, his age, the country he came from, and all the circumstances necessary to guide the court in arriving at a just decision; and as these facts are all recorded it seems to me that it ought not to take three months' time to get them. Now, take the extreme case of the gentleman from Colorado, that of an applicant in Hawaii. All the facts are of record at Washington, and it ought not to take more than two weeks' time to get those facts, even to Hawaii, and not more than three days' time to get them to any other part of the United States. Now, then, in order to meet that extreme case, why should the great body of petitioners all over the United States be delayed?

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman must be referring to a delay of ninety days?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I am discussing that.

Mr. BONYNGE. We have provided for posting of notices of the application. That gives public notice to everybody in the community, if anybody is interested to advise himself, and it may be that some person, seeing that notice posted and knowing that a person has applied for a petition who is not entitled to it, may desire to call attention to the fact. Surely ninety days is not a very long delay. The gentleman surely does not think that to wait ninety days for such a gift, a great benefit as we are bestowing—American citizenship—is a hardship to an applicant. It may be that he will be required to go back a second time in order to safeguard the interests of the Government.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The trouble with the section which the gentleman speaks of is that it simply emphasizes the difficulty, for immediately that the notice is posted any person who seeks maliciously to oppose the granting of the petition may do so, and thereby increase the hardship of the petitioner. I assert that every fact which the Government ought to know is contained in the official records made up at the time the alien lands here and supplemented by his declaration, and it seems to me there is no good reason for requiring an applicant to wait for ninety days before his petition may be acted upon.

Let us see when a man would have to begin the naturalization proceedings in order to vote at a general election. Suppose he files his petition on the 1st day of June. He waits ninety days. The final order is made on the 1st of September. The United States attorney waits forty-five days and then enters an appeal. That brings it to the 15th day of October. No time is stated in the act and can not be stated for the decision of the appeal. The result is that if the court takes any considerable time in deciding the appeal, a man can not vote at that election. The result is that any man who wishes to vote must file his petition in the early spring, at least nine months before the general election.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] and, apparently, the committee in the supposition that the United States will not appear in 10 per cent of the cases. I think the observation and experience of almost every Member of the House is that where it is made a duty of the Government, or the Government is given a right to do a thing, it is the duty, and the Government does it. In these cases, if the Government has a right to appear and cross-examine a petitioner, it becomes the duty of the Government to appear; and if the Government fails in the duty, some newspaper, with a scare headline, tells how somebody is naturalized who is a scamp of some sort, and then the Department of Justice over here will have a fit. Congress will then be instantly called upon to make an appropriation to provide sufficient help, so that the district attorneys may appear in every court where naturalizations occur. It is just as inevitable—this process—as the following of day by night. It is a sure thing that if the United States Government is given a right and the United States district attorney is given a right to appear in opposition or to cross-examine—I will not say in opposition—the petitioner, then district attorneys will exercise that right by force of public opinion, brought about by a few cases, at some time. I do not say that that would be wrong. The gentleman asks, Would it be wrong? What I want to call the attention of the committee to is this: You place, through this bill, the power in an administration at Washington, in case of a closely contested national election, of electing its party candidates. We naturalize in the United States every year hundreds of thousands of citizens, I take it.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think the gentleman is in error. We have no exact data, but the estimate made by the Bureau, from the best sources that could be obtained, is somewhere between 75,000 and 100,000.

Mr. MANN. Immigrants are coming into the United States now, and will continue to come, unless they are cut off by the proposed immigration bill, at the rate of a million a year. That means more than 100,000, probably 200,000 persons who are capable of becoming citizens, so far as age is concerned, and perhaps more than that. Most of these people in the past have applied for citizenship. But whatever the number may be (in the city of Chicago it certainly amounts to thousands every year), an astute district attorney who wanted to carry the election in favor of his side could very easily take an appeal in all cases of men who were going to vote the opposition ticket. And my observation and experience are that these advantages are seldom let go by, and I have not the slightest doubt that that sort of thing would be resorted to; not openly, not with the pretense that that was being done, but a suspicion would arise as to the propriety of the naturalization of men who were going to vote the Democratic ticket, when the administration was Republican, and vice versa when the administration was Democratic.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the last two words. I am not a member of this committee, but I am in accord with the committee in proposing this term of ninety days, and I believe that citizenship in this country is worth ninety days, or a longer period if necessary, to secure what is looked after in this bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that the Government will appear in many cases. Now, suppose the Government does appear in many cases. The Government ought to appear in every case in which there is any doubt. The Government ought to appear in every case that should be investigated. These immigrants are coming to this country from all over the world, and all that may be required to be known concerning them before they are naturalized can not be determined in thirty or forty days, and therefore the Government ought to have all the time that is necessary. And it seems to me that ninety days, where inquiry has to be made in other countries, is not too much time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Waiving the matter as to whether the Government ought to appear in all cases, as a matter of argument, will the gentleman tell us how the Government can determine what cases are suspicious unless the Government does appear in every case?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then this bill ought to be amended so that the Government should be required to appear in every case, one way or the other.

Mr. MANN. I thought that was the logic of it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In my judgment, the Government will not appear save in exceptional cases.

Mr. MANN. How can the Government tell what are exceptional cases unless it appears in all the cases?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is what the Bureau is for, Mr. Chairman.

I move that all debate on the section and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman make it five minutes? I want to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be now closed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to offer an amendment to the motion that debate be closed. My amendment is that debate be closed in five minutes. I wish to offer a substitute and to have a chance to explain it. I hope the gentleman will accept that amendment.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will accept that amendment, to close debate in five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize anybody until this question is stated. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] will be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken on the motion, and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate will be closed, in accordance with the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the following substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. I understood the Chair to state that debate was closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair should have stated the five-minute debate. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty;" and insert after "petition," in line 5, "except in case where the United States has appeared, when final action shall not be taken until at least ninety days have elapsed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does this: It reduces the time, except in cases where the United States has appeared, and in those cases no final action shall be taken until after ninety days have elapsed.

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not quite catch your amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the Clerk to report the amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not understand how that would work at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will call the attention of the gentleman to it. The section then would read, commencing line 3: "In no case shall final action be had upon a petition until at least thirty days have elapsed after filing and posting the notice of such petition, except in cases where the United States has appeared, when final action shall not be taken until at least ninety days have elapsed."

Mr. BONYNGE. Then the gentleman would require, within thirty days from the filing of the petition, the examination should have been completed and that the district attorney should have appeared in court and entered an appearance. I can not accept that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It covers the gentleman's objection, that where objection has been made they ought to have ninety days.

Mr. BONYNGE. The ninety days I said they should have was in order to give the authorities—the Government of the United States, which is the other side to the application—an opportunity to determine whether or not it desires to object. You are to shut them off in thirty days, and say at the end of thirty days you must complete your examination.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that if the present provision be left in the bill it will be impossible for anybody to be naturalized in the State of New York within six months of any general election. If there be no objection filed within thirty days——

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I will.

Mr. BONYNGE. Do not your State laws now provide in New York State that no man can vote at a general election unless he has been naturalized ninety days preceding the election?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; that is my recollection.

Mr. BENNET of New York. We have that law in our own State just now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true; but with this provision no one could get naturalized within at least three months previous to the three-months' period. So it would be seven or eight months, or perhaps longer, that it would be necessary to file a petition before a general election in order to vote at that election. This amendment covers the gentleman's objections.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it not a fact, if your amendment was adopted, in self-defense the Government of the United States would be forced to enter appearance within thirty days in every case, so as to give ninety days' notice and——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt it is intended that the United States shall enter every case, and my belief is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 4, strike out "ninety" and insert "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] whether or not sixty days would be sufficient for all purposes?

Mr. BONYNGE. I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that the debate has been closed and I have no right to take the time of the committee any more than anybody else.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Can not the gentleman take time enough to answer the question?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at the close of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire the opportunity——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 9, page 9, after the word "jurisdiction," the following: "It shall be lawful at the time and as a part of the naturalization of any alien, for the court in its discretion upon the petition of such alien to make a decree changing the name of said alien, and his certificate of naturalization shall be issued to him in accordance therewith."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask unanimous consent that I can speak for at least five minutes. It is not often that I desire to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent——

Mr. GRAHAM. I desire to strike out the first word in the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] asks unanimous consent that he may speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Does that go with the reconsideration of the amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether after permission is given the amendment will be before the House and the previous action of the House considered as disregarded.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is agreed to, and will not again be before the House for consideration. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire first of all to thank the House for this courtesy.

This amendment was suggested and, in fact, drafted by Hon. Joseph Buffington, of the United States court of western Pennsylvania, and sent by him to my colleague [Mr. BURKE], who is unavoidably absent.

It will enable many of the foreigners who have almost unpronounceable names, and who are now being naturalized, to change their names to English names corresponding to their foreign names or abbreviate their original names. They can now, by filing applications and duly advertising according to law, accomplish this result, but as it entails great expense and trouble very few avail themselves of the present law. They can now of their own free will drop a portion of their name, but very few people are aware of that fact and others are deterred from fear of legal complications.

At common law a man may lawfully change his name, or by general usage or habit acquire another name than that originally borne by him, and this without the intervention of either the sovereign, the courts, or Parliament; and the common-law rule, unless changed by statute, of course, obtains in the United States. (21 Am. and Eng. Ency. Law, p. 311.)

At the common law a man may lawfully change his name. (Linton v. First Nat. Bank of Kittanning, 10 Fed. Rep., 894. Opinion by Acheson, J.)

A man's name is the designation by which he is distinctively known in the community. Custom gives him the family name of his father and such prænomina as his parents choose to put before it, and appropriate circumstances may require senior or junior as a further constituent part. But all this is only a general rule, from which the individual may depart if he chooses. The legislature in 1852 provided a mode of changing the name, but that act was in affirmance and aid of the common law, to make a definite point of time at which a change shall take effect. (Laflin & Rand Co. v. Steytler, 146 Pa. St., 442.)

Two names familiar to the American public are noted in the opinion of the court in the last-named case, both of which were names adopted by the individuals themselves without the aid of courts, to wit, U. S. Grant and Grover Cleveland, instead of Hiram Ulysses Grant and Stephen Grover Cleveland. The facts are set forth in the opinion of the court as follows:

The blunder of the friendly Congressman who nominated him to West Point transposed and altered the names by which General Grant has gone into history, and considerations of convenience or taste have induced President Cleveland to omit one of the names his parents bestowed upon him. A name, therefore, is the title used for the identification of an individual, and the intent of its requirement in full is certainty of such identification. The full name, therefore, is no more than the whole of such title, as it is used by himself and his neighbors for such purpose. To construe the statute to require the literal and absolute following of the entire list of names which the person may have had bestowed upon him would be giving it not only a very narrow and technical construction, which serves no purpose of the act, but even one which might tend to defeat its real intent. A statement signed "Stephen Grover Cleveland" would not create certainty, but doubt, as to its author.

Now, as to an object lession to the Members of the House, I send up to the Speaker's desk a list of a few names of citizens of the United States recently naturalized in Pittsburg and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sample list of names of American citizens recently naturalized in the United States courts at Pittsburg.

Mocseh Zemiszkcivicz, Franciszek Wojciechosky, Jonas Szuhodolinszkoi, Josef Schloegigruber, Ivan Srbljanovic, Stanislaw Szymkewich, Panagiotis Roskinitopoulos, Blazej Radziszewski, Felice Pietropaolo, Stephan Onarejcso, Antoni Niespodzianski, Piotr Myslywiecz, Antonio Mazzacarallo, Ignacz Leszczynska, Franz Imbierowicz, Petro Georgopulos, Jan Gibosiewrce, Georgy Feckomichala, Antoni Dzingielieski, Josef Drljanovcani, Vincenzo Campisano, Pasquale Perre Francesco Bevilaqua, David Zaia Aghakhon, Jan Blahumsiak, Johan Skrzycki, Mihaly Sztachanes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes to explain the purpose of the amendment that I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on line 5, page 9, after the word "petition," the following: "Provided, That if no objection be made to the naturalization of the applicant within the ninety days' notice, then the applicant may appear at any day after the day named in the notice and have his petition heard."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may have two minutes to explain the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the provision of the bill as it now stands, if the applicant does not appear upon the day set in the notice and make his proof, the entire procedure would fall to the ground, and he would have to begin de novo. Now, applications for naturalization are generally made on the approach of an election, and if one were defeated on the first attempt he would not have his right to vote; but having gone to the extra trouble and annoyance which this bill calls for to bring his case to the attention of the court, and then being unable to appear either himself or his witnesses on the day set, he ought not to be compelled to lose what he has been to a great deal of trouble and annoyance to have done. But if there be no objection, then he shall be permitted to appear at any time thereafter and have his petition heard. If no objection is made up to the day stated in the notice, then it is fair to assume there is not going to be any objection; but he might not be able to appear on the day set for him or might not be able to have his witnesses there. I called attention once before to the very great hardship which this bill is going to work upon the aliens of the western country, where the distances to the courts are very great. A man in my district may have to go 200 miles to reach the county seat or the court. Now, they are to go there with their witnesses, and generally they have not a great number of neighbors from whom they can select their witnesses. They must be there on a day certain, and if they are not they lose the benefit of all they have done theretofore in making their application. I think this amendment justifies the purpose of the bill, and I hope the committee will not oppose it, as it does not undo any of the safeguards that they have provided.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I ask forty seconds to answer the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, the language "stated days," in line 2, page 9, very plainly refers to days set by the court, and there is nothing——

Mr. BONYNGE. It is a law in New York to-day.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is the law of New York to-day. Now, there is nothing in the language which provides that if a given case is not reached and not concluded on one day the court shall not adjourn until another stated day.

Mr. SMITH of California. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to reply.

Is it not necessary in order to preserve his case that he should have it changed to another day certain? It will be necessary for him or some one to appear and make the motion for a continuance. It is not supposed that the judge will continue this case; and even if the court would, how could the court know what other day would be convenient to an alien who lives from 150 to 200 miles distant, when he might be absent because of sickness of himself or of witnesses, and the court would not know what had prevented him from appearing on that day; but if no objection were made, he could present himself at some other time, if he were permitted to come in, and finish making his proof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language: Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise qualified to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the amendment of which I gave notice and which is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 10, after the word "States," add the following words: "And provided further, That the requirements of this section shall not apply to any alien who has prior to the passage of this act declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in conformity with the law in force at the date of making such declaration."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to this section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 9, by striking out, in lines 22 and 23, the words "write in;" and in line 23, after the word "or," strike out the word "in;" and in lines 23 and 24, to strike out the words "and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language;" and to insert in line 22, after the word "not," the words "read, write, speak, and understand;" so that the same as amended shall read:

"That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not read, write, speak, and understand his own or the English language: Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise qualified to become citizens of the United States."

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have an amendment to the same section read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he sends to the Clerk's desk may be read for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, except the syllable "pro," and insert: "SEC. 9. That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not speak the English language."

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, the report of the committee, on page 3, says, among other things:

An alien is admitted into this country under existing laws without any educational qualification. He is permitted to reside in the country and enjoy all the advantages of our citizenship and its opportunities for his own improvement. It has seemed to your committee that any alien of ordinary intelligence who desired to take advantage of these opportunities and to fit himself for citizenship in our country could, in the five years' residence which is required in the country before he can apply for naturalization, acquire sufficient education to comply with the requirement that he shall be able to write, either in his own language or in the English language, and speak, read, and understand the English language.

It seems to me that is too harsh a qualification for us to require before a man can become a citizen at this time. I have therefore offered my amendment, which provides that a man be required to speak, read, write, and understand either the English language or his own. It puts it in the alternative. It gives him the option of one or two languages, and that I think in itself is a liberal education. And if you will stop to consider how many men we have here, how many people there are in this country who do not thoroughly understand the science of language, either English or any other kind, yet who have made good citizens, I believe you will say that this amendment of mine goes as far as we dare go in requiring an educational test. To go any further would simply be saying that we are going to build up two classes—one class, the educated, who shall have the right to vote and say who shall make the laws, and another class who can simply come here and live, work, and pay taxes, but have no rights as citizens. I say if we are going to do this, let us make it impossible for those people to reach our shores; but let us make it so that if they do come here by our invitation they shall be taken and given the rights to which they are entitled.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY], in my opinion, goes a little too far in one direction, and in another direction it does not seem to me to go far enough, in providing that a man shall be able to speak English. Now, a man may be able to speak English, and yet may not be able to read, write, or understand it. That would hardly be a qualification which would fit him for naturalization or citizenship, if we are going to pass any restrictions at all; but, on the other hand, there may be many people, and undoubtedly there are many Members of Congress who have in their districts colonies of people who have come here and settled and who make some of the best citizens in this country. For instance, a colony of French, Swiss, Polish, Bohemian, Lithuanian, or German citizens come from the mother country and settle in one particular part of our country, say, in a particular county. They never get much outside of that county. Now, to say that they are not good citizens I think we will all agree will be stating an untruth. I believe this amendment of mine is as far as we should go at this time in providing educational qualifications. I ask the Members of this House to pass it. [Applause.]

[Mr. STEENERSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last word in line 22, page 9, and all of lines 23 and 24 and insert the following, "read and write in the English lahguage or in his own language."

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move that the amendment which I just sent to the desk be substituted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota to ask that his amendment be reported. The Clerk will again, without objection, report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just read from the desk removes from the bill practically all of the educational tests. No man has a higher appreciation of the privileges of American citizenship than I have, and no man has a stronger desire to dignify American citizenship. I believe that any policy which would permit any large body of men to live in the United States and not be eligible to American citizenship is wrong. The tests to apply to this proposition are those which tend to common ends and common interests, and if we require immigrants coming to this country to speak the English language after they have lived here for five years, that is not an unreasonable requirement.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, under your amendment as it reads now, might not it be possible for a man to live here any number of years, and although he may have all of those qualities which would fit him in every way for citizenship, make him a man who would be in accord with our principles, the principles of our Government and our institutions, yet it would not be possible for him to gain admittance as a citizen, because he could not speak the English language.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. No, sir; because when a man otherwise eligible to become a citizen has lived in this country for five years, if he has taken an interest in the affairs of the country, if he has intermingled with our people, if he has brought himself in contact with our institutions, he will be able to speak the English language so as to comply with this requirement.

Mr. WHARTON. Suppose this alien who comes here from a foreign shore, poor as most of them are, has to go to work in some plant or factory or some other line of industry where he earns his living with his hands and has to work all day to support his family and lives in a community of people from the same country that he comes from, whether he be Lithuanian, French, Swedish, German, Polish, Bohemian, or of any other nationality, is it not possible such a man as that, while he might become a good citizen, yet it would not be physically possible for him on account of lack of time to give away from his work and the necessity of rest, of sleep, of recreation, etc., would it not be possible for large numbers of them or one of them not to be able to learn English or speak it?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. No, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PALMER. I want to ask a question——

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Let me answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. No man, no matter what language he may have spoken, can labor day in and day out in any employment and not acquire a practical knowledge of the English language, because he is not associated always with men who speak a foreign tongue. He is associating with men who in most instances speak the English language, and the one thing which tends to the assimilation of all elements in this country is the common language.

If I believed, Mr. Chairman, that a man otherwise qualified to become a citizen would by that requirement be excluded from citizenship, I would not offer this amendment; but I believe that any man who has sufficient interest, sufficient energy, and sufficient ambition to become an American citizen should and would make the effort necessary to acquire the language which is the language of the land of his adoption.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course we are dealing here with facts—not with conditions as they ought to be, but as they are. Suppose a man had not the opportunity of learning the English language; suppose he is a good citizen in every other respect, but by his associations in the shop and with his family, and considering the locality in which he lives, he has not the opportunity of learning the language, would you not punish him by this provision? Would you not keep him for all time out of the privilege of becoming an American citizen?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Perhaps so, if the conditions stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] existed. But, Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive of any man employed in this country in any line of business or work who has not this opportunity.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to cite an instance. Two-thirds of the State of Minnesota has been settled by men who could not speak the English language originally. They have built schools and colleges throughout that State, and they have the best educational system in the United States. They had no opportunities themselves for learning the language on the frontier. When a man is on the frontier, where he is building a schoolhouse for the future generations, he can not go to school himself. He is busy. Those are things that you can not get around.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Let me ask the gentleman, What language is being taught in the schools that are being built?

Mr. STEENERSON. The English language. They are the most enthusiastic people in any State in the Union.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit me to make this suggestion? Suppose a foreigner was a farmer and remained at home attending to his own business, what opportunity would he have for association with those acquainted with the English language and to acquire a knowledge of it?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman that I have in my district a large foreign population speaking languages other than English. If I believed by this amendment I would take from one of these men a right he is reasonably entitled to, I would not offer it. I believe, and my observation is, that in five years' time they do acquire a sufficient knowledge of the English language to comply with this requirement.

Mr. BURLESON. If that is so, what is the necessity for an amendment? Why do you have any amendment at all?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Because, Mr. Chairman, this bill as it stands requires that the applicant shall read and write. My amendment does not require that he shall read or write in any language, and makes the sole requirement his ability to speak the English language after five years' residence in this country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course your amendment liberalizes the provision?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes, sir; that is the point I am getting at.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Probably we shall vote for that, unless we can vote——

Mr. COCKRAN. Is it in order to oppose the adoption of all of these amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand what the gentleman has said.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is it in order now to move to strike out the whole section? Is it in order to take the floor in opposition to all these amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. To take the floor in opposition to any of them. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like the indulgence of the committee in advance for a little additional time, as I want to discuss the whole principle underlying this opposition, and I was incapacitated from attending the House during the pendency of the general debate.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York how much time he desires?

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not quite know. It will be but a short time, I think, as I have not anything prepared. I came down under sudden summons.

Mr. BONYNGE. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman was absent during the general debate, but he expressed to me a long time ago the desire to debate this section of the bill. I do not wish to be at all unreasonable, but desire to say that most of the general debate was not upon this section. I intend that there shall be debate upon it, but I would like to get some idea from the gentleman how much time he will require.

Mr. COCKRAN. Twenty minutes to half an hour to debate this section.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman twenty minutes to see if he can not conclude his remarks in that time. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] may proceed for twenty minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, while I take the floor formally to oppose all pending amendments, my ultimate intention is to move that the entire section be stricken out.

It is not any exaggeration to say that this proposal is one of the most important ever submitted to the American Congress. If adopted into law, it must work a complete revolution in the naturalization laws which have governed us since the foundation of this Government, and therefore it would not merely affect decisively our own condition, but it would involve consequences of the utmost moment to the whole human race.

So far as this measure aims to regulate the procedure of naturalization, to make it orderly, uniform, effective in all the different States, I think it deserves nothing but praise. Whatever conditions of naturalization Congress in its wisdom may see fit to establish, it is in the highest degree desirable that they be enforced with rigor and impartiality. But this particular section proposes a change, not in the procedure by which the conditions of naturalization are to be enforced, but in the conditions themselves—a change so radical that if adopted, it will result in the withdrawal of this country from one of the most commanding positions which it has occupied in promoting the improvement of human hopes, the uplifting of human conditions, and the spread of civilization throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects of this question which I hope the committee will consider very carefully. First, its effect if engrafted upon existing immigration laws, and secondly, the advisability of enacting it, even if it were possible to assure ourselves that the laws governing the admission of immigrants to this country would be amended in a similar direction.

I think the committee will have little difficulty in concluding that while the law governing immigration remains in its present form this proposal is wholly indefensible. As the law stands, our ports are wide open to all members of the Caucasian race. To enter this country a person needs only to be of good moral character and of physical ability to earn a livelihood. Up to the present time the conditions of admission to our population and of admission to our citizenship have been practically identical. Under this proposal they are made wholly different. It establishes an educational qualification for naturalization which probably not 10 per cent of the million and odd people who came into this country last year could undergo successfully.

The first question we must consider, then, is the effect of admitting every year a million aliens to our population who must be excluded from our citizenship if this proposal be adopted into law.

Of course, if the immigration bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] should become law, then an educational qualification will be imposed on every immigrant at the port of entry, and, of course, it would apply itself automatically to the same person when he sought admission to citizenship. But I am sure the gentleman from Colorado will concede that we must consider this section in the light of its effect on the law as it is, not on the law as it may be altered or amended hereafter.

Now, I wonder do gentlemen conceive the full significance of this proposal. First, consider its possible effect upon our foreign relations. Gentlemen must be aware that the Government of the United States claims the right to protect its citizens wherever they may be; to follow them with its watchful eye whithersoever they may go, and see that in every country a traveling or visiting American shall be afforded equal rights before the law with the native-born citizen or subject. While we assert that right against all other governments, we must in morals and conscience concede the same right to them. Our citizens sojourning abroad are a numerous class, but generally they are wealthy travelers for pleasure, who spend large sums of money wherever they abide. Their visits are keenly welcomed, and wherever they may go everthing is done to promote not merely their security, but their comfort and even their amusements, so that their expenditures may be encouraged.

Aliens coming to this country, on the other hand, as a general rule, are without money to spend, but under the stern pressure of a livelihood to gain. There is nothing about them to awaken friendly interest among those with whom they come in contact. In the main, they are ignorant of our language and of our laws. Far from appealing to the interest of the native, they are likely to provoke hostility which may even reach turbulent demonstrations. If these aliens are not received as citizens, they must remain subjects of the governments under which they were born. Any violence perpetrated against them that could be charged to race prejudice or religious animosity may form a basis for representations by the government to which they owe allegiance.

The gentleman from Colorado must remember that only a few years ago in the city of New Orleans the lynching of some Italians became the subject of an acute diplomatic crisis, which this country settled by the payment of a large sum—I think it was $25,000—to the relatives of the victims. Had these men been naturalized they would have been entitled to the same protection as all their fellows and no more. Their security would have concerned no government but that of the State in which they lived. No alien government could have asked a question about them. Is it wise, is it defensible, to multiply sources of foreign complications by maintaining a large and constantly increasing body of alien residents whose right to equal treatment under the laws may at any time become a subject of discussion between the United States and foreign countries?

Surely, sir, a proposal effecting a change so momentous in our policy should be justified by reasons cogent, weighty, unanswerable. What reasons are advanced in support of it? So far as I know, we have nothing but some vague phrases of the gentleman from Colorado, reiterated again and again, to the effect that benefits resulting from citizenship are very great, and therefore that conditions of citizenship should be made very difficult, apparently on same mysterious principle that benefits and difficulties should be made to balance each other. The gentleman seems to forget that admission to citizenship involves the assumption of burdens as well as the acquisition of privileges. He seems to forget that while American citizenship is a high privilege, it does not consist in escaping burdens to which others are subject and acquiring rights which are denied to others, but rather in assuming very serious burdens without any very great extension of substantial rights.

What essential right that the citizen enjoys can you deny to an alien, once you have admitted him to your population? The right which our political system holds essential and inalienable is the right of every man to work when, where, how, and for what he pleases, and to enjoy in liberty and security all that his work produces. Can you deny that right to the alien the moment he lands on this soil, without reducing him at once to servitude? Your Constitution, which prohibits slavery, compels you to give the alien when he reaches this country the full protection of your laws, the right to work, the right to sell his labor, and to enjoy all that his labor produces. All the power of your Government must be exercised to defend him in that privilege, not for his sake, but for your own. True, in some States he is not allowed to own land directly, but all other fields of investment are open to him, and by ownership of corporate shares he can become the possessor of land to any amount that he may wish to acquire. And while you must, by the very organic law of your political being, employ every agency of government to protect and defend him in all his essential rights, yet under the operation of this proposal he would be exempt from any obligation to bear a part in defense of that government if this country were invaded or threatened with invasion. He is exempted from jury duty and many obligations which are part of the burdens assumed when citizenship is acquired.

While vast and steadily increasing numbers are admitted to your population, whose lives, liberties, and property must be protected by your laws, is it wise to relieve them from bearing a share in the common defense? But the gentleman justifies this proposal on the ground that an educational qualification will of itself improve the quality of the electorate by limiting the suffrage to educated men. Even if the gentleman's fundamental assumption be true, if education be indeed conclusive proof of moral merit—which I deny—this proposal would not restrict suffrage to the educated among those who seek our shores. This proposal would not exclude anybody from the suffrage, for the simple reason that the suffrage is not a subject of Federal control, and therefore can not be regulated by Federal statute. We can exclude voters from citizenship, but we can't prevent aliens from becoming voters. If this proposal be adopted, aliens who never can be citizens will still vote in many States of this Union.

Conceive, Mr. Chairman, what this may portend. It is well within the bounds of possibility that this country may become involved in a dispute with another country, against which a large number of persons dwelling here may be inflamed by racial prejudices, by memories of wrongs inflicted on themselves or on relatives, and the votes of these aliens in pivotal States may decide a Presidential election. On that election may turn a question of peace or war. Its result may plunge this country into hostilities, and if this provision be adopted these aliens will be free from any obligation to face the bullets which their votes may have provoked.

But, Mr. Chairman, the most ludicrous feature of this proposal, conceived in distrust, if not contempt, of the alien, is that in operation it will result in creating two distinct classes of citizens by elevating the naturalized to a higher plane than the native citizen. Under such a system a vast majority of the aliens admitted to citizenship must speak and know two languages. Everyone not from an English-speaking country must be able to speak, read, and write his own language, and besides he must be able to speak and read English. This is practically a requirement that he be master of both tongues, for whoever can write one language can write any other which he is able to read.

Now, this will be rather a high degree of intellectual attainment. How many of us here could meet such a test? But everyone holding a certificate of naturalization will be adjudged to have passed it successfully. Citizenship for the native carries with it no implication of any particular excellence of quality. The native may be ignorant, unable to read or write. He may be quarrelsome. He may be unclean of person and unclean of speech. He may be incapable of earning his own support. But so long as he keeps out of jail he is equal in point of citizenship with the best, the most cultivated, the most efficient of all his fellows. In the whole body of our citizenship the naturalized under this law must be raised to a plane of peculiar distinction, since he alone will be held by the formal finding of a competent court—by solemn judicial decree—to be a scholar and a gentleman.

Is this an exaggeration? It was said of Sir Walter Raleigh that he was a soldier, a sailor, a scholar, a statesman, and a gentleman. Well, Mr. Chairman, under this proposal every naturalized citizen must have four-fifths of the qualifications which distinguished that most brilliant ornament of the Elizabethan age. He must be a sailor, at least to the extent of having crossed the sea. He must be a soldier to the extent of assuming liability to bear arms in case of war. He must be a scholar to the extent of having mastered two languages; and he must be a gentleman, because he must satisfy a court that he is of unblemished moral character; and surely no one will question that the possessor of all these excellencies, moral and intellectual, must be a gentleman.

This section does not absolutely require an applicant for citizenship be a statesman, but as statesmanship is an accomplishment that can be acquired, and as the naturalized citizen will be eligible to every office in the country except one, it is reasonable to assume that in some instances at least he will develop into a statesman. Is it any exaggeration to say, sir, that if this proposal be adopted, in the body of your general citizenship a select body will be established, of which each one must be actually four-fifths and potentially five-fifths a Sir Walter Raleigh, while the native citizen may be anything short of a convict?

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the creation of separate classes in the body of our citizenship, and I think it is in the last degree unwise, almost disloyal, to change our naturalization laws so that while citizenship will raise no presumption of excellence in native born, it will raise a presumption of high excellence in naturalized citizens.

The gentleman from Colorado may say that these criticisms do not constitute an argument against the principle of this provision, but merely in favor of carrying it a step further back and of applying the educational test to every immigrant at the port of entry. I am quite ready, sir, to concede that it is impossible to discuss this policy intelligently or profitably unless we go to the very root of the proposal and argue candidly the graver question which underlies it. Should immigration itself be restricted; and if so, should the restriction be made effective by an educational qualification?

Sir, I have no hesitation in submitting to the judgment of this committee, and I think it is capable of demonstration, first, that immigration instead of being restricted should be encouraged, and, secondly, that this legislation, if it be adopted, instead of operating to exclude the undesirable will operate to admit none but the undesirable, while it will shut out those who are in the highest degree desirable.

In discussing whether immigration itself should be restricted, the first step is to ascertain the precise relation between the immigrant and this country. Some gentlemen seem to think there is a great sacrifice, or at least a grave risk, of imperiling some American interests in giving asylum to this body of refugees from over the world. I believe that the immigrant, while he obtains great advantages from this country, gives as much—aye, sir, more than he receives. I will go a step further. I say there is nothing can come through our ports so valuable to our prosperity and welfare as a pair of human hands willing and eager to employ themselves in the cultivation of this soil. [Applause.]

What object can move the unlettered immigrant to come here? What can he do when he enters this country? Does anybody think that he comes here to seek a life of ease? How could he expect to secure it? Who would furnish him with support or with amusement? He can come with but one purpose, and that is to work. As he comes without capital, he can not be his own employer. He must therefore sell his labor in the open market. No one will employ a laborer for the mere sake of obliging him or being generally agreeable. The laborer will be employed only where there is a profit in employing him. He can't find employment—he can't work—he can't live unless he produces by his own labor all that he consumes himself—that is to say, his wages plus a profit to his employer. The difference between the wages which he receives for his own support and the total value of his product is the measure of his contribution to the general welfare of the country. Every laborer who comes here is, then, a source of abundance. No matter what his disposition may be, under the very law of his being he must be a contributor to the common stock, because he must produce more than he himself consumes. Any attempt to restrict the number of immigrants coming to this country is, therefore, an attempt to reduce the sources of our prosperity.

I know that certain shortsighted persons say the immigrant, when he engages in work, displaces some American laborer. Mr. Chairman, I will not dispute that statement. It is true in one sense. Every immigrant who works on this soil does displace a native laborer. But how? He displaces him not by excluding him from all employment, but by lifting him on his shoulders to a higher plane of industry, where he earns higher wages. Surely, sir, it must be obvious to every gentleman here that under the essential conditions of industry no immigrant can work without improving the condition of everyone who dwells on the same soil.

The immigrant is nearly always an unskilled laborer. To live he must engage in what is called "day's work"—that is to say, in the most poorly paid, though the most important, in the whole field of industry. He digs drains and ditches; he paves streets and sweeps them; he builds railroads; he engages in every form of work which requires the strongest muscular exercise and obtains the smallest compensation.

Now, this work the American can not be induced to do. Yet it must be done. It is the most important of all work, the fountain of all other employment. It must be performed before any skilled workman can ply his trade. Do gentlemen realize that skilled work is seldom if ever exercised on the earth itself, but always on some product of the earth? No mechanic, whatever his skill, can become productive until he obtains raw material on which that skill may be employed. And those raw materials must be produced by that manual labor (the most poorly paid, yet the most important), to which the American laborer will not stoop, but which the immigrant gladly embraces an opportunity to perform. Every immigrant who brings from the bosom of the soil a single commodity gives employment to others instead of wresting employment from them. The coal which he produces with his pickax gives employment to the railway hand who transports it and to countless others at every stage of its progress from the mouth of the pit where it is mined to the furnace where it is consumed.

The agricultural laborer who turns a furrow in the field and scatters seed upon it is producing grain which when harvested must be carried to the mills and there ground into flour, and then transported to bakeries, where it is made into bread for the consumption of millions; and at every stage of this production men are furnished employment by the raw product of unskilled labor. Wherever a skilled mechanic is active, we know that somewhere or other unskilled laborers are ministering to the necessities of his industry, providing the materials on which his craft is exercised. Can a building be constructed, or a bricklayer, a plumber, a carpenter, or any other skilled laborer be employed in its erection until the foundations are laid and the cellar dug by unskilled labor? Can an engine be placed in motion by the trained hand of the engineer until the untrained hand of some common laborer shovels the coal which feeds its boiler?

Skilled laborers in this country obtain the highest compensation in the world, but these high wages could not be paid if the materials of their industry were not furnished by cheaper labor. A bricklayer, who is paid, say, $5 a day for eight hours' labor, receives a very high compensation judged by the rate of wages throughout the world. But how is it possible to pay him that amount? For remember every laborer, skilled or unskilled, must not only produce the amount of his own wages, but in addition he must produce a profit to the capitalist who employs him. It is possible to pay the bricklayer $5 a day only by keeping him every minute of the eight hours, which constitute his period of toil, actively at the work of laying bricks. Suppose he had to carry his own bricks from the pile in which they were heaped to the place where he was working. Does anybody suppose he could earn $5 a day, that any employer could afford to pay him such wages if two-thirds of his time were spent in carrying bricks from the ground? But this an unskilled laborer can do quite as well, and perhaps better than a trained mechanic. And under the operation of our immigration laws, an alien, and Italian, a Hungarian hod carrier is glad for $1.60 a day to carry those bricks to the bricklayer who is thus left free to occupy every minute of his time in the higher form of industry for which he is specially trained, and therefore to produce the equivalent of his own wages and of his employer's profit.

While the high wages of the bricklayer are made possible by the laborer who carries his bricks, yet the skilled laborer is not benefited at the expense of the unskilled laborer. That Italian or Hungarian hod carrier never had wages one-half so high as what he receives for aiding the bricklayer. The immigrant improves his own position considerably by performing the unskilled labor, while at the same time he contributes decisively to the welfare of the native laborer. In the light of these indisputable truths, what must be the effect of the policy which you propose on the prosperity of the American people? What will be the result of applying to prosperous conditions this jejune statesmanship, which, in the name of improvement, seeks constantly to disturb or modify the political system of a country whose history shows that its government is the best and its laws the wisest the world has ever known? Exclude immigrants from your soil, and what becomes of the bricklayer, what becomes of the engineer, what becomes of all the skilled workmen who must depend for their high wages upon the facility and cheapness with which they can secure the raw materials of their industry?

If immigrants be shut out, obviously Americans must be required to do this rude elemental work, which can not be suspended without paralyzing the whole industrial machine. This means higher wages must be paid for it. But if the hod carrier be paid more the bricklayer must be paid less. Every building, every enterprise, every productive scheme, whatever it may be, is yielding in wages now the utmost that can be drawn from them. You can by this provision or by other legislation rearrange the distribution of the total wage fund, but you can not swell its volume. If the wages of the hod carrier be increased, the wages of the bricklayer must be reduced, and what is true of bricklaying is true of industry in all its branches. This vast tide of immigrants coming to our shores, seeking no advantage or privilege except to use their hands in production, take nothing from any man's mouth, but they are increasing abundance on all sides. The marvelous prosperity which has distinguished this country above all others began when the tide of immigration began to flow hitherward. Our prosperity has grown with the growth of immigration, and now, Mr. Chairman, for no reason that can be understood, we are asked to arrest this stream of producers which, while improving the condition of its own units, has worked measureless improvement to this country.

Mr. Chairman, I confess I can not understand the mental processes which have brought such a proposal before this House. I am aware, sir, the gentleman from Colorado insists that he aims merely to improve the quality of our citizenship and the quality of immigration to this country, while gentlemen who agree with him say that we should welcome good immigrants, that we can not have too many of them. Then, sir, in the name of common sense, of right thinking, of profitable, not to say reasonable, discussion let us know what is meant by a "good immigrant."

I believe, sir, that we do not want linguists, but we do want laborers. [Applause.] I do not think we need men skillful in dialectics, but we do need men efficient in wielding implements of production. Strike out this section, and I will gladly agree to a provision which, instead of providing a ridiculous educational test, which can not operate to exclude the really undesirable, will establish an industrial test so thorough that anyone who meets it will have proved himself an efficient laborer, and, therefore, a useful citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask for ten minutes longer.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman will finish in ten minutes, I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRAN. I wish to add merely this suggestion: So far from improving the quality of citizenship, this provision, I repeat, will result in debasing it. Whom will this shut out?

Does the gentleman realize that the men who can pass the test which is applied in this section, or the test proposed in the immigration bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], are not men who will work at manual labor for $1.50 a day? A man who has received such training will in the nature of things seek employment where these intellectual attainments can be turned to profit. He will compete with Americans in the field of bookkeeping, the various branches of clerical work, in journalism, or in the professions. Do we need any additional competitors in these fields? I trust some supporter of these measures will answer this question candidly and frankly. On the other hand, we can not have enough producers. We can not have enough men to wield the pickax and shovel, to swell the tide of production and to broaden the demand for skilled labor throughout the country by multiplying the raw products which must be manufactured into the finished commodities available for consumption.

The gentleman from Colorado seems to think that the man who can read and write is morally better than the man who, ignorant of letters, can merely work. Sir, I have never known a man working with his hands who was dangerous to any community. The pests of society—the men who imperil the existence of governments and violate their laws—are all educated to some extent, and the most dangerous are not those of least extensive reading. Certainly this section would not operate to exclude a single one of those whom we regard as peculiarly objectionable, while, as I have said, it would shut out multitudes who are highly desirable. Do you think this section would exclude the man who hurled the bomb at the procession returning from the royal marriage in Madrid on Wednesday? Would it have excluded the Chicago anarchists? Would it have excluded Czolgosz? Would it have excluded Guiteau, had be been foreign born? Would it exclude Johann Most or a single anarchist who has come here to spread his pernicious doctrines? Sir, this section might be described with perfect accuracy as a device to shut out the laborious and admit the loquacious. [Laughter and applause.]

I appeal to the experience of all gentlemen here, and ask who are the best men morally you have ever known? Have they always been the possessors of certificates declaring them to be educated or highly trained? How many of you have met depraved men or vicious men in the great tide that rolls every morning from humble homes to some scene of industrial activity? If I were asked to name the man who of all my acquaintance came nearest to filling my ideal of a gentleman—and my acquaintance has been pretty extensive, covering every class and description of men, from the culprit awaiting his doom to the Pontiff on his throne—I should say it was an unlettered naturalized day laborer, who lived for fifty years in the village where I have passed the last twenty summers, who with no peculiar advantage whatever, so impressed every one who met him, from the laborers who worked with him and the neighbors who lived near him, to the foreman who directed him and the employer who paid him, with such a sense of his excellence and native dignity that he was always addressed personally and referred to in his absence as "Mr. Carey."

He is dead now and I can speak of his as a completed life. He was a citizen of Port Washington, a constituent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKS], who probably knew him personally. He had accumulated by untiring industry and rigid economy some money, variously estimated at $30,000 to $50,000. Equally free from insolence or servility, he never offended or feared anyone. Indeed, he had but one fear. It was not of death. I visited him in his last sickness, and saw him face the final ordeal with perfect composure and majestic calm. But he was haunted by an apprehension that some day he would be unable to do a day's work. This he dreaded, not from fear of want, he was beyond it; not from avarice, he was singularly free from the slightest taint of it, but from mere love of work, from a simple, unaffected, but profound sense of loyalty to the task—the obligation to labor of some sort—which is imposed on every human being by the God who created him.

Sir, Mr. Carey was not an exceptional person. He was a type of a large class, members of which are found in every city and village of this country. I appeal to gentlemen residing in small communities, where the different elements constituting the population are known to each other, is there a village or town in any State of this Union—at least in any of those States with large numbers of alien-born inhabitants—where men of this character can not be found? Yet, sir, Mr. Carey would be excluded from citizenship under this proposal or from admission to this country under the law projected by the gentleman from Massachusetts, while Czolgosz, Guiteau, Spies, Most, and every apostle of assassination and murder, preaching hostility to all government and all morality, could meet the test imposed by either bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this matter solely in the light of our own interests. I do not believe we have a right to consider proposals of legislation in any other light. As the head of each family must be governed by the interest of its members in everything he does, each government must exercise all its powers to promote the welfare of its own citizens. Still, Mr. Chairman, it is an inspiring and glorious feature of any political system that the laws which operate most effectively to promote its welfare operate also to improve the conditions and brighten the prospects of the whole human race. Sir, our policy of offering free asylum and cordial welcome to all white men has been at once the wisest and most beneficent for ourselves, but at the same time it has been the most decisive contribution of all ages to the progress of mankind. All the great events of history, the struggles and tumults, the conquests and invasions, the victories and defeats of which it is a record, are merely features of an irresistible tendency to movement among human beings. That movement of races no system of political organization, no form of government, however powerful or extensive, has been able to arrest or even to check, and that movement of races has always been the result of land hunger, of an imperious demand for new lands by mouths which could no longer be fed by the lands they occupied.

It was this hunger for land that moved barbarian tribes to invade the Roman province, overturn the Empire, and wreck the monuments of ancient civilization. That same hunger kept all the nations in a state of practically perpetual war during the period known as the "dark ages." Hitherto this pursuit of land led inevitably to violence. Men could obtain access to new soil only by conquering it, and new soil was essential to their existence. And so it came to be a general belief that the very condition of life forced men to war against each other. This belief of past ages has been refuted by the experience of this country. This soil has been the theater of a race movement greater than any the world has ever seen, yet it has involved no violence, entailed no injury to anyone, but wrought enormous benefits to countless multitudes. We have lit before the footsteps of humanity this shining truth: That men in the largest numbers can obtain access to new soil and new lands, not as foes to trample it, or as conquerors to plunder it, but as laborers to cultivate it, and while bettering their own condition, improve immeasurably the condition of those who receive them. We have changed this movement of races from a source of dread and waste to a source of confidence and abundance. The instinct which hitherto has raised the hands of men against each other in destruction, whereby all were injured, has under the benign influence of this country led them to cooperate in peaceful production, whereby all are benefited.

Sir, I appeal to every gentleman present, in the name of American patriotism, of human progress, and of Christian civilization, to maintain that policy which has been such a fountain of abundance to ourselves and such a light of inspiration to the world, to leave wide open the doors through which all the industrious may freely enter here, that hereafter, as in the past, vast masses of men, however dissimilar in language, in tradition, and in habits, may in our fields of industry—and their children in our public schools—continue to be fused into that mighty citizenship which for a century has been the strongest inspiration to progress, which is to-day the supreme hope of civilization, and which will remain its firmest bulwark forever. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, during the general debate that was had upon this bill much of the discussion was devoted to this particular section. I do not think it will be unreasonable, therefore, if I shall ask that some limit shall be placed upon the debate upon this section. Before attempting to fix that time, I desire, however, Mr. Chairman, to make a brief statement of the position of the committee in reference to this section.

During the general debate, Mr. Chairman, I yielded readily and willingly to any gentlemen who desired to propound questions to me either in regard to this section or any other section of the bill. I had no opportunity, and have had none up to the present time, to make any concise, consecutive statement of the views of the committee in reference to this matter, and therefore I shall ask, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not be interrupted in making the statement that I desire to make to-day. No effort was made to interrupt the gentleman from New York, and therefore I must give notice now that I shall decline, until I have made the statement that I desire to make, to yield to any gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. COCKRAN. Before the gentleman begins, would he allow me to suggest that if he has any question that he desires to put to the gentleman from New York, the gentleman is ready to answer?

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I will not yield. I asked unanimous consent for the gentleman to have thirty minutes' time. I think the gentleman will certainly accord me the courtesy of not asking a question. I did not ask him any question, and I ask this consideration, which I think is due to me from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRAN. One moment!

Mr. BONYNGE. I will not yield to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. It is a personal explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield to a question and declines to yield for a personal explanation.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman misunderstood what I said.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is it the gentleman desires to say?

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman yields now. I did not ask the gentleman a question now, as he does not desire to be interrupted; what I did say was, if there were any questions the gentleman from Colorado wished to put, the gentleman from New York was entirely ready to answer.

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from New York will understand that if I had desired to ask him a question I would have propounded it to him. I had no question or I would have asked it. The gentleman asked a great many questions during general debate and I tried to answer them at that time, and do not desire to be interrupted now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to proceed. This section is in the exact language of the bill drafted by the commission appointed by the President to revise the naturalization laws. We have consented to one amendment, and, after consideration, the committee proposes—or, at least, so far as I am concerned, I shall favor an additional amendment.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the strong argument that has appealed to me from the beginning in reference to the provision of this section is that which every Member upon the floor of this House, so far as I can recall, who discussed this bill during the general debate agreed to—that those who speak the English language will more readily and more easily assimilate with the great mass of our population and become familiar with our institutions. I do not recall in the general debate had upon this bill a statement made by a single gentleman upon the floor in contradiction of that proposition; and that is, that those speaking the English language more readily assimilate with our people. It is not that I regard the English language as better than any other language. The French language is more accurate, the German language more forcible, and the Italian language is more rhythmic. Other languages may have other advantages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BONYNGE. But, Mr. Chairman, whatever the advantages of other languages may be, the English language is the language of this country, the language in which all its court proceedings and legislative proceedings and the large part of all its business is conducted.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that history and reason alike demonstrate that you can not make a homogeneous people out of those who are unable to communicate with each other in one common language. You can not point to an instance in history where you will find a homogeneous people who have been unable to communicate in a common language. If you point to the Roman or the Danish or the Norman invasion of England, I answer you that it was but one single invasion, and that the invaders were soon lost, in a generation or two, in the great mass of the people. Wherever one race has conquered another it has in almost every instance either imposed its own language upon those whom it conquered or else it has taken the language of those whom it conquered. There never has been an instance in history where a great homogeneous people has been built up unless those people have had a common language.

Ah, some gentleman may point to the little Republic of Switzerland and tell me that they speak three different languages in that Republic—the French, the German, and the Italian. I believe it is true, but those who speak different languages are gathered together in their separate cantons, separated, as I understand, by mountain ranges, and have but little communication with one another. Remember, too, if you will, that we are not confronted with a single invasion, but yearly great numbers, now exceeding a million, already 90 per cent of whom can not speak English, are coming to our shores. This bill does not deal with the immigration question. We are concerned now with the requirements that we shall prescribe by law for the granting of naturalization to aliens. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], during most of his speech, was not discusisng the question that is before the House, and, consequently, there was no reason why I should interrupt him with any questions. He was discussing another and a different bill that will be presented at some other and some future time. I am not in charge of that bill. The bill that is before this House is a bill dealing with naturalization, a question which the gentleman from New York knows is separate and distinct, although growing out of the immigration question. But the question whether you are to make a citizen of an alien and whether you are to admit him into this country are two separate and distinct propositions.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the requirement that an alien shall speak the English language before being admitted as a citizen will not work a hardship upon aliens, and in support of that proposition I call the attention of the committee to what is shown by the census of 1900. According to that census, Mr. Chairman, there were in the United States at that time 5,167,000 persons of foreign birth, males and of voting age. The number who had become naturalized was 2,857,907. Of those who had become naturalized only 3.5 per cent were unable to speak the English language. Of those who had filed first naturalization papers there were 415,000, and of those 13 per cent were unable to speak the English language, demonstrating that the great majority of those who took out the first papers did during the succeeding five years acquire the English language.

But now mark what it shows in reference to those who had not taken out even their first papers. Of that number there were 1,067,000 (I will not give the odd figures) who had not taken out their first papers. Of that number 34 per cent were unable to speak the English language; demonstrating to my mind, Mr. Chairman, that of those who do not acquire our citizenship or acquire our language a larger percentage of them remain not only aliens in law but aliens in sentiment. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is a travesty upon the naturalization laws of this country that such an occurrence should take place as happened in the Federal court of my own State less than a month ago. On the 9th day of May, according to a clipping from the Denver Republican, two Italians were brought before the Federal court of Colorado to answer to the charge of perjury in securing their naturalization papers. They pleaded guilty, and in throwing themselves upon the mercy of the court, as ground for leniency, they urged to the court that they did not understand the questions that were propounded to them when they were being made citizens of the United States; and because they could not understand those questions, because they did not understand the English language, the Federal court granted leniency to them and simply imposed a small fine upon each of them. I am not complaining of the sentence of the court. I pity the Italians, who were probably herded by some political committee to go into court and be naturalized for the purpose of using them upon election day. That is one of the things we want to prevent; but I do condemn the system that makes it possible for a great number to be gathered in, just preceding an election, for such purposes. Men thus naturalized can have but a poor conception of the dignity of American citizenship.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen say that this is a discrimination in favor of English-speaking people as against foreigners. I do not share in the slightest degree any sentiment of hostility to any aliens of any race. I could not by any possibility, Mr. Chairman, entertain such views. Antagonism to foreigners! Nothing could be further from my thoughts. I am simply seeking to do that which I believe to be for the welfare of my country. I will yield to no man in admiration of what foreigners have done for the upbuilding of the country and in its defense, but I trust that above all things I am an American citizen and that I can look at this question from the standpoint of an American seeking to do that which is for the welfare of our country. I am ready to accept every man for what he is, regardless of his race, his color, or the language that he speaks. When you tell me that we never had such a qualification for a hundred years, let me answer you, Mr. Chairman, that during the past thirty or forty years there has been a large increase in the percentage of the non-English-speaking people.

Prior to 1870 a majority were of the English-speaking races. Since that time the increase has been such until now, as I remember the figures, more than 90 per cent during the past five or six years who came to this country were unable to speak the English language. We provide by law, and have for over a century, that an alien must live in the country for five years before he can be naturalized as an American citizen. The purpose of that requirement is that he shall fit himself for American citizenship during that period. It is admitted on all hands that the ability to speak the English language will enable the alien to more readily assimilate with our people. I think that during the five years of residence required of an alien before he can become an American citizen it is not unreasonable to ask that he take advantage of the opportunities afforded to him in this country and at least make sufficient progress toward assimilation as to be able to speak the language of the country whose citizenship he seeks. The statistics show that it will not work a hardship, that there would be a very small percentage who would be left out if this requirement existed, and I am satisfied that even that small percentage would qualify if they knew it was a requirement for citizenship. I can not be answered by citing individual cases. We never are able to legislate for individual cases. We must legislate for that which is for the best good of the greatest number.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think, after the careful consideration I have given this matter for the past three months, that perhaps all the committee hoped to accomplish by the provisions of this section, as originally presented, can be accomplished by the requirement that the applicant shall speak the English language. We are not concerned at this time with the question of suffrage. That matter, under the Constitution, is relegated to the several States. In view of the other provisions of the bill under consideration, which will, I trust and believe, prevent as far as laws can the commission of naturalization frauds, speaking for myself and several other members of the committee, I shall be satisfied to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY]. I can not speak for the committee. I am firmly of the opinion that the passage of the bill, and the provisions of the section under discussion, will meet with the earnest approval of all true Americans, whether native born or naturalized. The naturalized American is equally interested with the native born in safeguarding and elevating our citizenship. He has proved it in a thousand ways, and I know we can trust our naturalized citizens to approve whatever measures may be necessary or proper to make of our people what they have ever been in the past—a happy, progressive, and homogeneous people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to extend his remarks for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BONYNGE. No, Mr. Chairman; I will object to that myself. I am desirous of finishing this bill this afternoon. I shall not ask for any further time, but will ask for unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado to extend his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the framers of this bill that it is desirable to enact legislation that will raise the standard of American citizenship, but will it be wise legislation to deprive a deserving man from another country of the rights and privileges of American citizenship because his circumstances and environment may render it impracticable for him to acquire a high state of proficiency in the English language, in addition to his own language.

Let us examine section 9 of this bill a little. It provides:

SEC. 9. That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language.

Under that section an alien might be highly educated in his own tongue and be able to understand the English language, and yet he could not become an American citizen. Further than that, he might be a profound scholar in his native language, and be able to speak and understand English, and yet, if he could not also read the English language, he is barred from American citizenship.

In my own State and district there are thousands of Germans—as well as other nationalities—who are proficient in their own language, and they are among the best citizens of our country—loyal, patriotic, hard-working, and thrifty. These same people have contributed largely toward making the city of Davenport, with its 40,000 people and $20,000,000 of bank deposits, the first city of the United States in the per capita amount of money in banks. They are familiar with the best American thought and ideals. They read their own daily and weekly newspapers, which are thoroughly American in everything but the type in which they are printed.

Would it be fair to say to such men: The door of American citizenship shall be closed against you, because, perhaps, your hours are so fully occupied in productive toil that you can not find time to acquire a thorough and complete knowledge of the English language; or because, probably, you have passed the age when it is practicable for you to do so?

If this section is enacted into law as it now stands, would not the result be a discrimination in favor of immigrants from English-speaking countries, and against those from Germany, Norway, Sweden, and other countries?

This section imposes a more severe educational test for naturalization than is imposed by any State in the Union, with possibly two or three exceptions, upon those qualified to vote. But more than that, no standard is fixed as to how proficient he must become in reading, speaking, and understanding the English language. That is left to the will of the judge to whom he applies for naturalization, to be exercised as he sees fit in any case.

If it be wise to impose an educational test for naturalization, let it be so drawn that it will not discriminate against some of our most desirable classes of immigrants. It would be an injustice to fix such a rigid educational test as would exclude from citizenship men who are otherwise in every way worthy and well equipped for its duties. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON], and to concur, before starting in, with my colleagues on the committee from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] in advocating, or, at least, consenting to, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I can not at all agree with my colleague from New York in his statement that there is no difference between immigration and naturalization——

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman did not misunderstand me.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I had not completed my sentence.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh——

Mr. BENNET of New York. So far as the requirements are concerned or so far as the basic principles involved in the two are also concerned.

Mr. COCKRAN. I think the gentleman ought to realize what I said was this: That if the similar provision reported in the immigration bill were adopted into law it would apply itself automatically to naturalization; but the first part of my speech was directed to showing that under the law as it stands, if this provision be adopted there will be one qualification for admission to the country and another for naturalization, and the result must be a vast and increasing number of men could not become citizens.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think the statement I made reiterates in substance the statement which the gentleman made. I regard the two questions as far apart as the questions of opportunity and achievement. I want to say to my colleague from New York that on the immigration question I thoroughly agree with him and have gone so far on that question as to disagree with a majority of the committee which has reported the Gardner immigration bill. I believe in allowing able-bodied, clean-minded aliens to come here whether they can read or write in any language or not, so long as they are willing to undertake their share of the burdens of this country; but naturalization is another question. There was a man out in one of the Western States who recently sent a letter to the President inclosing a two-dollar bill, and he wrote in the letter something like this:

Mr. President, I have recently been naturalized out here—and I have come to the conclusion that it is not worth the price, and to get unnaturalized I send you another $2.

I think it was in the State of Iowa—

I do not think there is another man in the United States other than that gentleman and my colleague from New York who does not think there is value attached to American citizenship. [Applause.]

I was born an American citizen, and I value in the highest degree every attribute of American citizenship. I would not call it a burden to serve my country under that flag. I do not call any privilege of an American citizen a burden, but we must remember when we extend American citizenship that, as the gentleman truly said, we extend every attribute, privilege, and burden of American citizenship. And what does that mean? It means that a man who becomes an American citizen can, among other things, go abroad and claim at all times the protection of the American flag. There are a thousand men to-day doing business in the city of Jerusalem each one of whom claims to be an American citizen, and not one of whom can speak the English language. In what does that result? It results in the condition where an American citizen under our laws goes to his consul and demands his protection, and has to have the assistance of an interpreter in order to make his wants known to the consul of the Government of which he claims to be a citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for three minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is perfectly clear, it seems to me, that a man who stays here for five years, who has all the opportunities of mingling with English-speaking people, of reading English-printed books, of assimilating English in every way, and who in five years does not take enough interest in the institutions of the country to learn the English language sufficiently to speak it, ought to remain an alien in fact as he is in mind.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not true that a great many men come here after passing middle age because they have a son or daughter here—old men, highly respectable, intelligent in their own language, industrious, law-abiding in every sense, and become attached to our institutions and want to become citizens?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer that last year there were 1,026,000 immigrants who came into this country through the ports on steamers. Out of that 1,026,000 there were over 45 years of age—and that is not such extreme old age—only 60,000 men and women. So you will see how few there are. And I will venture the statement that those men and women, if they become attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, if they desire to be good citizens and become good citizens, can in five years learn the English language.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in our own city of New York, where there are so many foreign born, it is affecting and touching to see the interest which men of the class such as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has called attention to—men who come here over the age of 45—take in learning the English language, learning to speak it, learning to read it, and learning to write it, until, when the time comes and they sign their final applications in the courts, 90 per cent of those men can sign their names. I do not for a moment agree with any man that disparages our foreign-born citizens. They have the energy, they have the honesty, they have the pluck, and they have the intention, and they do learn to read and speak and understand the English language, and any one of them that does not take the interest to at least learn to speak the English language ought to stay a citizen of the country from which he came.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not think that the committee understands that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY] provides no reading and writing test at all. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] provides that the reading and writing and speaking test may be made in any language.

I have been somewhat astonished to find members of the committee, when we had not had any committee meeting on the question, advocating the acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska, for if that is accepted, gentlemen, it means that we cut out entirely the qualification which says that a man must read and write before he can be naturalized. If, on the other hand, we accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, we allow the test to be made in any language, and therefore, although we do not require it in English, if we accept his amendment, we require that a man must be educated and must read and write in some language. That is exactly the provision which is in the immigration bill which will be before you in a few days.

I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON], but I have a decided objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY]. I shall not argue the general principles which control this matter. Every man in this House has considered over and over again whether or not a man ought to be able to read and write before he is naturalized. You can all decide that for yourselves. You have all thought of it repeatedly. This is the law in my own State. In Massachusetts a man must read and write before he can vote and before he can be naturalized. Every man here has ideas on this subject; but I want the House to understand that the Committee on Immigration does not accept the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska, nor any other amendment. If they put in the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY], they vote to cut out all requirements that a man must read and write; if they vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, they do not cut out the reading and writing requirement, but they say that he must read and write in some language.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War under certain restrictions to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbors, areas, and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6354. An act to survey and allot the lands embraced within the limits of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and to open the surplus lands to settlement.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BONYNGE. I want to see if we can not fix the time when debate on this amendment shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask that all debate close at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Missouri. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BONYNGE. How much time does the gentleman himself want?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. About five minutes, and probably an extension.

Mr. BONYNGE. I move that all debate close in fifteen minutes on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in fifteen minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 75.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 57.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, that a Presidential campaign is approaching is manifest from the outbreak of impassioned oratory on both sides of this House upon the subject of the tariff, presaging another warfare over that well-worn theme.

It would seem that time and experience ought to have settled some things, and among them the immeasurable value of the doctrine of protection to American industry, wages, and markets through the imposition of tariff duties.

The subject has been under discussion since James Madison reported an act in the First Congress for levying "duties on foreign goods, wares, and merchandise," which its preamble declared to be "for the support of the Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and for the encouragement and protection of manufactures." This enactment was the second recorded on the statute books of the United States. It received the approval of George Washington on the 4th of July, 1789. As the 4th of July, 1776, was the date upon which the little band of patriots assembled at Philadelphia in the name of the people of the English colonies, threw off the tyranny of the British crown, and declared the "colonies were and of right ought to be free and independent," so the 4th of July, 1789, was the auspicious date when industrial independence, not only of Great Britain, but of all the world was declared, and the foundations were laid for the system that has at least helped to set the United States in the front rank of all the great manufacturing nations.

Observe the purpose of the first tariff act as declared by the act itself. It was to "encourage and protect manufactures" by levying "duties on foreign goods, wares, and merchandise." The patriots who assembled in the First Congress, who had laid the foundations of the Republic broad and strong, believed in the policy of protection. They believed in the "enlightened selfishness" that would secure to workmen on this side of the Atlantic the privilege of employing their labor in the manufacture of all articles needed for domestic consumption. They believed in keeping for the merchants and manufacturers of the United States the opportunity to sell the merchandise and manufactured articles made by these workingmen in the home market. They believed in taking care of their own and in fulfilling the scripture, that "he who provideth not for his own, especially for those of his own household, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

The results of the first and of all subsequent tariff acts passed for the purpose of protecting home workmen and home markets have fully justified the belief of the members of the first Congress and of the immortal Washington, who added to the first law the luster of his name.

The doctrine and practice of protection have helped to make the United States the Eldorado of the nations. In point of material wealth it is the richest of all; in education, intelligence, morality, second to none. No people in all the world are so well clothed, housed, fed, and cared for as the people of the United States. While the millennium has not dawned and there are still advances to be made and fields to conquer, the dweller in this favored land may rightfully claim that his country leads the stately procession of the nations in all that pertains to conditions that make life worth living. He who fails to gather from a century of experience in tariffs for revenue only and for protection the lesson of the immense superiority of the one over the other reads history with little discrimination or desire for knowledge.

Many times the doctrinaires, "students of maxims and not of markets," have succeeded in imposing their views upon the people, and many times in our history disaster has overtaken our enterprises.

Now, after a period of prosperity unexampled in this or any other country, the demand is again made that the doctrine of protection be abandoned and a tariff for revenue only substituted in its place. In the face of all the ruinous experience of a hundred years the people are asked to try it again.

The reasons put forward in support of the demand for change are:

1. The tariff is an unconstitutional scheme of plunder calculated to tempt a few at the expense of many.

2. It is the promoter and protector of the trusts, which enable a few men to accumulate immense fortunes at the expense of the many; strangles individual effort and reduces the workingman to a kind of industrial slavery.

The change demanded is the enactment of a tariff for revenue only, which, it is declared, is the only lawful and just tariff, one which will bring the largest revenue from the lowest rate of duty. No higher rate than the lowest possible rate should be imposed.

The first reason, viz, that a protective-tariff law is unconstitutional, is merely a rhetorical flourish. The Supreme Court of the United States finds a tariff laid, not for revenue but for protection, within the power of Congress under the Constitution, which is an end of the contention.

If a protective tariff is a scheme of plunder, it must plunder somebody. Who, then, is plundered by the tariff? Not the wageworker, who finds steady work and the highest wages in the manufacture of the articles needed in the daily life and business of the people. Not the manufacturer, who is shielded from foreign competition in his home market. Not the farmer, who finds ready market at his door at remunerative prices for all he can raise to those who toil in gainful occupations, and who have wages sufficient to enable them to purchase all the necessities and some of the luxuries of life. Not the salaried employees, because their very employment depends on the general prosperity which always attends high wages and plenty of work. Not the teachers, whose schools must close in hard times, when business is dull, wages low, and work scarce.

Perhaps the idle rich, who "toil not, neither do they spin," may pay more money to live than they would under a tariff for revenue only, but they are not complaining, and if they were, the complaint would not be heeded.

Those who may reasonably complain of the American protective tariff are the foreign workmen, who have less work than they would have if they could make for American markets; the foreign manufacturer, who hates the American tariff with a holy hatred; the importer of foreign goods, whose opportunity is circumscribed and business injured.

In 1902 I chanced to travel from Amsterdam to Berlin. The day was hot and the way long, which was an excuse for listening to a most vehement and eloquent denunciation of the American tariff by a fellow-traveler. He demonstrated to his own satisfaction that it would ruin America and that very shortly.

Toward the end of the day it occurred to me to ask the business of the enemy of the tariff and friend of the United States. He turned out to be an agent for a cloth house in Manchester, England, on his way to Roumania to establish a trade in cloth for that his house had lost in the United States by reason of the robber tariff.

These are the classes who do and who do not complain of a protective tariff.

The second reason—that the tariff is a promoter of the trusts—would be more convincing if it were not true that the combinations of capital called "trusts" originated in other countries and are most numerous in England, which is the last free-trade stronghold in the world, and that the most complained of and apparently obnoxious of all the trusts, viz, the Standard Oil Company, deals exclusively in an article which is free of duty. Both facts demonstrate the claim that the trusts exist independent of tariffs and are in no way dependent upon them.

Diminution of the tariff duties to a revenue basis would have no other influence on the trusts than to strengthen them by ruining their small competitors, individual and others, because in times of disaster the weakest must go down first.

The third reason that a tariff for revenue only is the only lawful, logical, and just tariff remains to be considered. In its favor it is argued that the smallest tariff plus the ocean freight would afford incidental protection equal to the difference in wages, which would be sufficient for all useful purposes.

Of course, if any duty at all were collected, it could be only on noncompetitive articles upon which no duty is now paid, and which would add to the price paid by the consumer, or on competitive articles now practically excluded by higher duties. Just to the extent that articles now excluded were allowed to come in under lower duties the home market would be surrendered to the foreigner, and the home workman and manufacturer would be deprived of the opportunity to make and sell the quantity of goods imported. Any duty higher than the lowest sum that would give the largest return would violate the principle of a duty for revenue only and become protective. If a protective tariff is an unconstitutional scheme to rob, then whether the duty protects little or much could make no difference with the principle. A little protection would be a little robbery if a great protection would be a great robbery. If a protective-tariff law is unconstitutional, the amount of the protection could not make the law more or less a violation of the Constitution.

Therefore a tariff for revenue only differs in no respect from free trade, so far as its effects on home interests are concerned. Make the duty low enough to encourage large importations, to the end that the most revenue will result, and the mischief would be practically as great as though no duty at all were exacted, because every yard of imported cloth or ton of imported steel costs the workman of this country the number of days' work that it took to make them.

One of two results would inevitably follow the enactment of a revenue tariff. Either wages would go to the European standard, or the goods consumed in this country would be made abroad and the immense sums distributed for wages annually would go to foreign workmen. It is not pleasant to contemplate the consequences of such a situation. I do not believe that any advocate of a tariff for revenue only can be found who will admit that he wishes to deprive American workmen of their work or wages; yet no other result could follow if the law proposed proved at all efficient as a raiser of income. Either the law would fail to raise revenue or, if it succeeded as a revenue raiser, it would be at the cost of American workmen. The theory that a tariff for revenue only would bring down the price of manufactured articles so that workmen could afford to work for less wages is fallacious. Just as soon as foreign manufacturers obtained possession of our markets and succeeded in closing our mills and factories the prices would be at their command, and, being human, it is safe to assume that prices would not grow less.

The effect of the present highly protective tariff is to practically prohibit the importation of manufactured goods which can be produced in this country in quantities sufficient to supply the wants of the people; at least that may be assumed to be the intention. The only valid objection that can be raised to the principle of protection is that a combination of manufacturers may cease to compete and exact too great a price. Indeed one of the conditions upon which a protective tariff is allowable is that competition will keep the prices down to a reasonable figure. If such combinations exist, they are in violation of the statute of the United States known as the "Sherman antitrust law," and violators are subject to severe punishment, provided by the law. Since the passage of that act existing monopolies have gone out of existence, either voluntarily or under pressure of prosecutions. The prices of manufactured articles in this country are not excessive if the rate of wages and cost of production are considered. That there are some remaining abuses none can doubt. "Justice travels with a leaden heel, but strikes with an iron hand." But the time is at hand when the last of this particular brand of lawbreakers will either go out of the business or behind the bars. Public sentiment is greatly excited on the subject, and it is not safe to trifle with an aroused public. Congress has armed the Department of Justice with sufficient law and sufficient munitions of war to bring all offenders to justice, and they are coming down like Crockett's coon, many of them without being fired at.

The vital burning question soon to be decided is, Shall present conditions continue; shall we endure the ills we have or "fly to others that we know not of?"

Before embarking on the experiment of changing the plan upon which the business of the country has been carried on since 1861, no doubt the people of the United States will undertake an examination of existing conditions for the purpose of ascertaining whether on the whole the system has produced satisfactory results. If the fact is established that the country and the people are growing poorer, that business enterprises are becoming less remunerative, that wages are less and work more difficult to get, that the army of unemployed is growing larger, then a speedy change will be desirable, the sooner the better.

In December of the year 1892 Benjamin Harrison, then President of the United States, sent a message to Congress, in which in figures which have never been disputed he proved that between the years 1860 and 1892, under a high protective tariff system, the wealth of the country had increased 287 per cent, the mileage of railways 448 per cent, and the average wages of labor per capita 41.71 per cent. Depositors in savings banks had increased 513 per cent, and the amount deposited 921 per cent. All of which justified him in saying that—

> There has never been a time in our history when work was so abundant or when wages were so high whether measured by the currency in which they are paid or by their power to supply the necessaries and comforts of life.

The President accounted for this wonderful and unexampled prosperity. He said:

> I believe that the protective system, which has now for something more than thirty years prevailed in our legislation, has been a mighty instrument for the development of our national wealth and a powerful agency in protecting the homes of our workmen from the invasion of want.

This message was written after Mr. Cleveland had been elected to succeed President Harrison. Upon this subject the message spoke of a protective tariff:

> The result of the recent election must be accepted as having introduced a new policy. We must assume that the present tariff, constructed upon lines of protection, is to be repealed, and there is to be substituted for it a tariff law constructed solely with reference to revenue; that no duty is to be higher because the increase will keep open an American mill or keep up the wages of an American workman, but that in every case such a rate of duty is to be imposed as will bring to the Treasury of the United States the larger returns of revenue. The contention has not been between schedules, but between principles, and it would be offensive to suggest that the prevailing party will not carry into legislation the principles advocated by it and the pledges given to the people.

The prevailing party did attempt to carry into legislation the principles advocated by it.

The subject of tariff revision, in accordance with Mr. Cleveland's views, was taken up at an extra session of the Fifty-third Congress, and what is known in history as the "Wilson-Gorman tariff bill" was passed. It was based upon the idea that revenue and not protection should be the object of tariff legislation.

Probably no measure ever enacted by Congress carried such general destruction to the industries of the country. The bill was not altogether a bill "for revenue only," but wherever it undertook incidentally to protect, the protection was inadequate, and therefore useless. It deserved the name given it by President Cleveland, who called it an act of perfidy and refused to give it the sanction of his signature.

Under this tariff immense stocks of foreign goods were forced on the market, displacing goods of American manufacture. Prices fell, factories closed, and an army of men, estimated at 3,000,000 in number, were thrown out of employment. Financial institutions closed their doors, cutting off the opportunity on the part of business men to borrow money; failures in business were so common as not to excite comment. Railroads went into the hands of receivers, more suspensions and more failures occurred from week to week, until it seemed as though the financial basis of support had given way, and that the whole country would be involved in irretrievable ruin.

Mistaken statesmen seized upon the distressful condition of the country to put forward the most seductive and dangerous financial theories. It was proposed to open the United States mint for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, foreign and domestic, at the ratio of 16 to 1, without reference to its intrinsic value. The inevitable result would have been to pour out upon the country an enormous amount of depreciated currency, worth not more than 50 cents on the dollar, with which the debtors could discharge their debts, and with which speculators could rob in a market in which prices would advance by leaps and bounds, only to go down with a crash that would have bankrupted the most conservative.

Nothing but the sterling sense of the American common people stood in the way of indescribable ruin. That sense did not fail. The "Boy Orator of the Platte" was laid low, and McKinley, who, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, had prepared and passed the bill that bore his name, under which the wonderful prosperity achieved under the Administration of President Harrison had been made possible, was elected President. Sanity prevailed, and the verdict of 1892 was reversed.

The news of his election was not a day old before confidence began to return. Without waiting for what they knew must come to pass the manufacturers and business men took hope. A special session of Congress was called to meet on the 15th day of March, 1897. The disastrous Wilson bill was repealed, and the McKinley bill, remodeled and made more thoroughly protective by Nelson Dingley and a Republican House, became a law. It has remained upon the statute books substantially as passed until the present time, the extra war tax imposed to pay the expense of the war with Spain having been repealed.

Under this and other protective acts passed since 1861 the country has reached a prosperity far in excess of that portrayed by President Harrison. Prosperity in "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over" came to the country under the Dingley bill. Let the marvelous figures tell the story:

From available sources of information prepared by the Bureau of Statistics of the United States under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor facts of interest and importance may be obtained which will shed great light upon the inquiry.

First, as to population. A poor country where work is scarce, times hard, and wages low never attracts people from other countries and is not apt to increase its population rapidly by natural causes.

In 1861 our population numbered 32,064,000. Since that time the increase has been enormous and without precedent in history. We numbered last year 83,143,000. Of these, 16,385,974 came from every country in Europe to better their condition and to share in the heritage of freedom. More than a million came last year, which is proof that in other countries the belief prevails that our country is still the haven in which the hungry may find food and the oppressed shelter. I know that a strong opinion is entertained by some very good men that immigration should be restricted, and that our doors should be closed lest our own people suffer. So far as excluding the anarchists, the criminal, the pauper, the dependent, and diseased, the opinion should prevail, but to the industrious and self-supporting immigrants who come here to make homes, to take up an allegiance to the Government of the United States and help to build up the great Republic I would not close the door of opportunity. We have but 25 persons to the square mile. When we approach Denmark, with 400 to the square mile, it may be necessary to consider total exclusion. The deputy commissioner of immigration at New York, a representative of labor, appointed because he was a fit man and because it was supposed he might be relied upon to enforce the immigration laws, is of opinion that every healthy and able-bodied immigrant is worth $1,000 to the country. If he is correct we gained near a thousand million of dollars from that source last year.

A great population would not be an advantage to a country if it was an idle population. Idleness and poverty are twins.

Our people are industrious. In 1880 we had 253,852 industrial establishments. They employed a capital of $2,790,272,606. They paid annually in wages $947,953,795. They employed 2,732,595 toilers and produced manufactured articles worth $5,369,579,191. Ten years later, in 1900, the number of establishments had almost doubled. They numbered 512,191, with a capital nearly quadrupled, being $9,813,824,380, paying more than twice the wages, viz, $2,320,938,168, to nearly twice the number of employees, namely, 5,306,143, and producing the enormous sum of $13,000,149,159 worth of manufactured goods, more than double the amount produced ten years before.

In 1861 the total number of miles of railroads in the United States was 31,286. In 1904 it was 212,349 miles, which is a little more than the sum of all the miles of European roads. Upon these national thoroughfares passengers and freight are carried more cheaply than in any other country in the world. Since 1892 the average rate per ton per mile for freight has been reduced from 0.94 of a cent to 0.78 of a cent. A poor country does not build railroads or reduce freight rates. The railroads are the pioneers of industrial development, as necessary to progress as labor or capital, and their prosperity is a true index of good times. The people may properly object to the methods of some of their managers, but they can not do business without them.

A great people doing a great business must have capital. Our capital increased from $13.98 per capita in 1861 to $31.08 in 1905. Every dollar of it is as good as any other dollar, and all are as good as any dollar in the world, whether represented by gold or silver, coin or Treasury notes, national-bank notes, or any other kind of notes with backs green or yellow—all are honest money, as good as gold.

Another sure testimony of prosperity and growth may be found in the business of the Post-Office Department, which disseminates information to the people. An ignorant, nonreading, and unprogressive people have no use for mails. In 1879 the revenue of the Post-Office Department amounted to $30,041,983 Last year, 1905, it reached the enormous total of $152,826,485, but this did not cover the cost of carrying on the business—that was $167,397,169.

If the factories have marvelously multiplied in number, production, and wealth, the farms, which are the foundation of all enterprise, the essential factors without which no wheel can turn, because men who work must eat, have not lagged in the rear of development. In 1866 they raised 867,946,295 bushels of corn, worth $411,450,830; but in 1905 the crop swelled to 2,707,930,540 bushels, worth $1,116,696,738. In 1866 they grew 151,999,906 bushels of wheat, valued at $232,109,630. Last year the bushels of that golden grain had multiplied to 692,979,489, worth in the market $518,372,727.

This is not the whole story. It can all be summed up in the fact that between 1860 and 1900 the value of the farm land, implements, and farm property had increased from $7,789,493,063 to $20,439,901,164.

Out of our abundance we sold farm products abroad in 1861 amounting to $149,492,626, but in 1905 the prolific soil yielded for foreign markets agricultural products worth $820,863,405.

Thrifty people pay their debts as rapidly as possible. Tested by this standard, the United States will not fail. In 1861 the debt per capita was $2.74. Owing to circumstances over which they had temporarily no control, the debt increased to $76.98 per capita by 1875. Last year the gratifying fact appeared that the public debt had been divided by six, leaving the per capita $11.91.

The true test of the prosperity of a nation is to be found in the value of its production in excess of its consumption. If a people ate up and wore out during the year all they had made or raised they would be no richer at the end than at the beginning. Furthermore, if they buy more than they sell, bankruptcy is only a question of time. In 1861, when the protective system was inaugurated which has been preserved since that time, we exported goods and farm products worth $219,553,833; but in the same year we purchased and imported foreign goods worth $289,310,542, and thus fell behind $60,756,709. Last year the total exports were $1,518,561,666, the imports $1,117,513,071, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of $401,048,595.

Quoting from the great speech of Hon. JOHN DALZELL:

> During the last seven years of Republican administration that had passed when the Chicago convention met (1904), the balance of trade in our favor was nearly ten times as great as the aggregate balances of trade during all the years from Washington to McKinley.

But if the people do not save, if they spend their gains in riotous living or unecessary luxury, their condition is not essentially better than that of those who sit in adversity. The savings banks of the United States, which are the banks of the plain people, showed deposits last year amounting to $3,093,077,357, belonging to 7,696,229 depositors. The average per capita was $423.74. This is the largest deposit and the greatest per capita ever achieved; it spells prosperity, full and abundant.

Lest it be said that the greater good is not to be found in the pursuit of mere national wealth, however successful, and that a nation may be populous and prosperous and rich, and at the same time sordid, groveling, and base, I turn with pride and pleasure to the fact that in 1904 an army of children, 16,256,638 strong, marched to the sound of the morning bell to the people's colleges, the public schools, where they acquired the beginning of education at the public expense, which amounted to $273,216,227. At the same time 7,392 students were fitting themselves in theological seminaries to preach the everlasting Gospel; 14,306 others were pursuing the ennobling study of the law; 23,778 others were in the medical schools and colleges fitting themselves to alleviate the suffering of the sick; 51,535 were fitting themselves in the normal schools for the honorable occupation of teachers, while 142,453 others were pursuing the pleasant path of knowledge in colleges and universities.

It is a record of which every American citizen has a right to be proud; it is proof that our people have not lost faith in the saving grace of religion or the ennobling influence of education.

The simple question, easily understood by the most unlettered laborer in the land, now is, Shall we go back to a tariff for revenue only; shall we again go through a period of idleness, depression, and starvation; or shall we stand by the doctrine of protection to American labor and American industry, which assures work and wages to our working men and women and prosperity for all our people?

Place power in the hands of the Democratic party, led as it is, and "the things that have been it is that which shall be," unless our Democratic friends, who now ask to take charge of our Government, write our laws, and dictate our policies, "have learned wisdom and acquired knowledge, and repented them of the evil." How do they stand upon the great, vital question of protection and free trade? We have a right to look at the utterances of their leaders and the declarations of their platforms for an answer. One of the great men of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives is Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Member of Congress from Missouri. He was chairman of the Democratic convention at St. Louis; he was charged with the duty of conveying to Judge Parker the news of his nomination; he is a prominent and frequent expounder of Democratic doctrine on the floor of the House. His opinions are therefore authentic and entitled to respect. In discussing the Dingley bill, he said:

> I repeat, that all may hear, that I am a free trader, and proudly take my stand with Sir Robert Peel, Richard Cobden, and Henry George. I may be a humble member of that illustrious company, but it is better to be a doorkeeper in the house of honest free traders than to dwell in the tents of wicked protectionists. I would destroy every custom-house in America. If I had my way to-day, sir, I would tear them all down from turret to foundation stone, for from the beginning they have been nothing but a den of robbers.

If any rise to suggest that he does not speak with authority, then listen to Hon. BOURKE COCKRAN, who was applauded to the echo when he said, in the House of Representatives on the 23d day of April, 1904:

> There never was a speech, there never was an appearance, there never was a performance that illustrated more clearly how directly every vicious perversion of government can be traced to the foundation of all corruption—the protective tariff, which has demoralized our whole political system.

If anyone still inclines to the belief that he spoke only his own sentiments and not those of his party, let him mark the language of the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, the Democratic floor leader in the House, temporary chairman of the convention at St. Louis, author of the platform which was adopted and of the gold plank which was not:

> In this country, owing to the decision of the Supreme Court in the income-tax case, founded on the provision of the Constitution of the United States about direct taxes, the goal can not be, as it was in Great Britain, free trade. Tariff for revenue to carry on a government economically and effectively administered becomes the American tariff reformer's goal.

If still in doubt as to what the Democratic party believes on this interesting subject, surely we may go to their platform of principles, put forth by the authority of their national convention in July, 1904:

We denounce protection as robbery of the many to enrich the few. We favor a revision and gradual reduction of the tariff.

Therefore we may be sure that no change has taken place in the beliefs of the Democratic party upon this subject since 1893. In fact, no change has taken place in the beliefs of the Democratic party since the appalling days of human slavery—since the human chattel by his unrequited toil produced for export the only crop raised in the South, supporting his master in idleness, leaving him abundant times to curse protection that added to the price of the goods in which he took his pay, and at the same time built up the free labor and added to the wealth and power of the North. Experience has taught them nothing; adversity, low wages, silent factories, starving men have taught them nothing.

Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil.

Not until the leaders of the Democratic party are cradled north of Mason and Dixon's line will any change occur in their tariff views.

What, then, may we reasonably expect if the Democratic party should again control the Government, assuming that the declarations of their leaders and the assertions of their platform are in earnest and honest? Certainly they ought to make an effort to save the people from what they call the evils that they assert inhere in the protective system. Protection is robbery and protectionists are robbers, says the platform. Surely, if they have their way, the robbery will be stopped and the robbers deprived of their means of robbing the people. If active measures are not taken to stop the robbery and protect the robbed, what can be gained by changing rulers? If active measures are taken, then people will be called upon to face again such dreadful times as prevailed between 1893 and 1897. There is no room for doubt about that.

If the time shall ever come when a change is desirable in the policy of this country with respect to the doctrine of protection, certainly it is not now. Of all the great nations, England is the only free-trade country left. France, Germany, Austria, Russia are all protectionist countries. Free trade has well-nigh ruined England. Her farmers, mechanics, laboring men, and manufacturers are crying for fair trade. They point to the fact that all other countries protect their home markets and secure them for their own manufactures, while England is a dumping ground for surplus product, which is furnished at a price that renders competition impossible. Her statesmen are taking action. Chamberlain, ex-prime minister, and Balfour, prime minister, in public speeches from London to Glasgow, have advocated a change in the fiscal policy of Great Britain as essential to save the remnant of her colonial trade and keep her home markets from being absolutely occupied by American and German manufactured goods.

They demonstrate that the doctrine of free trade has cost England her commercial leadership, and that her commerce and industries have fallen on evil times.

Mr. Chamberlain said at Glasgow:

It is not well with British trade. After a long period of success, the policy of unrestricted free imports has now shown evident signs of failure. Our exports are stationary in amount and declining in character. We receive from our competitors a large proportion of manufactured goods, and we send them a larger proportion of raw materials than we used to do. Our supremacy in what have always been considered our standard industries has been wrested from us, or is seriously menaced. One by one markets once profitable and expanding are closed to us by hostile tariffs. We have lost all power of bargaining successfully for the removal or reduction of these barriers to our trade.

Mr. Balfour said:

The most advanced of our commercial rivals are not only protectionists now, but in varying measure are going to remain so. Other nations have in their policies accepted the principle of free trade; none have consistently adhered to it. Irrespective of race polity and material circumstances, every other physically dependent community whose civilization is of the western type has deliberately embraced, in theory if not in practice, the protectionist system.

In the face of our own recent experience from 1893 to 1897, and of the unmistaken drift of events in other countries, the proposition to change our fiscal policy and substitute a tariff for revenue without protection, and thereby open our markets to the production of foreign mills and looms, with the consequent loss by our own people of opportunity to labor and earn bread, can not be entertained. Those who would do it must take the thirty millions of people in this country who are engaged in gainful occupations, earning living wages, to be lacking in ordinary common sense, or they would never have the hardihood to propose such folly. We seek no change, and least of all such change as they would bring us.

The Republican party renews its allegiance to the doctrine of protection. It is the bulwark of our industrial independence and the sure foundation of the prosperity of our people. A tariff for revenue is substantially, for all practical purposes, no better for the people than free trade. A protective tariff must adequately protect, or it is useless. Adequate protection keeps foreign goods out of our markets and gives the work of manufacturing and the consequent wages of labor to our own workers, and not to those of foreign countries. If the Republican party is retained in power the protective tariff will be assured.

Failing to convince the people that the doctrine of protection is unsound or to overthrow it by direct assault, the advocates of a tariff for revenue contrive by divers indirect means to destroy it. Among the insidious charges is one that the tariff allows goods to be sold by American manufacturers in foreign markets cheaper than at home. From this alleged fact the argument is adduced that if goods can be sold cheaper abroad than at home, then the price charged at home is extortionate, and that is made possible by the protective tariff, which shuts out foreign competition. As a punishment and preventive it is proposed to take the tariff off goods of this kind in order to let in foreign competition, which would destroy the business, and with it the opportunity to sell abroad.

First. Let the facts be ascertained. According to the census of 1900, the total value of goods manufactured in the United States that year was $13,039,299,566. The value of the manufactured goods exported was $433,851,756, which is about 3 per cent. Ninety-seven per cent of all the enormous production, valued at $13,000,000,000, was consumed at home. The small percentage of goods sold abroad would cut no figure if they were given away. But they are not given away. A careful investigation made by the Industrial Commission, a nonpartisan body, proved that more than 90 per cent of the total amount of goods sold abroad are sold for prices as high or higher than those received in the United States. About 10 per cent is all that is sold for cost or less.

To illustrate: Of every $100 worth of goods produced in the United States we consume $97 at home; of the $3 worth sold abroad, 90 per cent, or $2.70 worth, is sold for the price charged here, 30 cents' worth are sold for cost or less. Thus, out of every $100 worth of goods made we sell $99.70 at the same price at home and abroad and sell 30 cents' worth abroad at cost or less. In any event, it is not a killing matter, and has no effect on home prices; but no man sells his property at a loss without a reason. American manufacturers are not in the charity business if they can help it. What, then, is the reason for selling even 3 per cent of our manufactured goods abroad at less than cost? Simply a business reason. Overproduction, no sale at home, choice between shutting down factories, putting men out of employment, and disposing of goods in a foreign market at cost or below. That is a sufficient reason. It is not a question of tariff. The tariff has nothing to do with it. It is a matter of business policy, pursued by business men in this and all other countries.

Another indirect assault on the doctrine of protection is made by an appeal to the popular hatred of the trusts.

After indiscriminately and picturesquely denouncing all combinations of capital, classifying them under the general denomination of trusts, a remedy for the trust evil is proposed. It is to admit free of duty all goods the like of which are made in this country by trusts, and thus destroy them by competition.

Practically all the kind of goods manufactured in this country are now made in whole or in part by combinations called trusts. The remedy proposed would therefore admit free of duty all kinds of manufactured goods. There can be no doubt that the end proposed would be reached. Goods made by the pauper labor of Europe would certainly undersell and take the place of those made by the paid labor of the United States.

The trusts would be killed, but all men and women who work for wages would be mourners at the funeral. Before the big combinations went down under the avalanche of foreign importations the small concerns, owned and operated by individuals, which manufacture 87 per cent of the whole amount, would succumb. The conditions would permit all working men and women to join in the obsequies over dead trusts, and also all business men, manufacturers, employers of labor, agriculturists, all could consistently lift up a voice of lamentation over ruined industries, impoverished business, and universal ruin.

The country has been through similar experiences not less than four different times in her history, when under mistaken fiscal policies our markets have been surrendered to foreign competition.

The Republican party stands upon its record. It is without a parallel in the civilized world. A great rebellion suppressed; a Union reconstructed; slavery abolished; credit restored; debt paid; industry revived; prosperity assured; population trebled; wealth sextupled; our flag honored throughout the earth. Our very name has become a synonym for national patriotism and devotion to liberty.

The mission of this grand party will be ended "when every man within our borders may dwell securely in a happy home, and cast and have counted his equal vote." Until these things are accomplished our warfare with our ancient adversary will not end. [Prolonged applause.]

[Mr. BARTHOLDT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of very considerable importance. In my judgment, any action we take one way or the other will be far-reaching in its effect, more so than many gentlemen seem to think. I think we have been getting along nicely with our naturalization laws. I think to put a limitation upon the right to become an American citizen, of those who live here now, requiring them to read and write the English language, is a mistake. Section 9 of this bill says:

That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language.

This is unfair and unwise. We want all honest, industrious people of the white races here who care to come, and when here we should not require more knowledge of them than 80 per cent of our native-born people possess in order that they may become citizens.

I believe we can not base American citizenship upon the degree of knowledge that men possess, but it must be based upon character and courage, as it always has been, on the field in time of war, and at home in time of peace, in all our past history. I am willing to join with those who would exclude criminals and anarchists, who would draw the circle of moral character about all those who enter here; but when once you admit them, I do not believe it is wise to say that, no matter how honest they may be, no matter how industrious they may be, no matter how devoted they may become to the flag, no matter how well they may understand American institutions through the papers they read, printed in their own language, in German, Bohemian, French, Italian, and all the different languages; no matter what their worth as men may be, they can not become American citizens unless they learn to read and write the English language. I believe that is a great mistake. I believe we ought not to commit ourselves to such a precedent. I believe it would be a slap in the face of many of the very best citizens that we have in the country to-day.

I do not know about these people in the Northwest, who came from Europe to build up the great country to which they have immigrated. I have not lived in the Northwest, but I know from those who have lived there and from the history of the country that they must have been an honest, industrious, and God-fearing people, worthy of all the privileges of American citizenship. I do know something, however, of the two great peoples—the German and the Bohemian. South Texas is full of them, and I would to God there were more such scattered all over her fair domain. Wherever you go you will find them devoted to obedience to law, devoted to order, industrious and honest. You will go in many communities where you will find those who can not speak perhaps twenty words of English, but they know the duties that they owe to the country and they discharge them with fidelity. You will find many who want to bring their relatives over from the old country to live here, and to say to those people that they can not obtain the right of American citizenship unless they can read, write, and speak the English language is not giving them a square deal in the matter. I agree thoroughly with the views expressed in this line both by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] and by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. When we get down to it, what is the need of this? Whatever objection there may be to the presence here of certain classes is a question to be remedied by the immigration laws, but we are now discussing the naturalization of those who are here as well as those who may be admitted hereafter. If those who seek our shores are of a race we are willing to intermarry with and are honest and industrious, let them in, no matter what tongue they speak; and if, after being a reasonable time among us, they desire to declare allegiance to our Republic, upon proof of good character and devotion to free government, let them swear allegiance to our flag and take up the burdens and receive the benefits of American citizenship, no matter whether they read and write the English or any other language or not. Whatever troubles have come to us by immigration, none of them have rested on ignorance of English, but on vice, want of character, and an aversion both to work and to obey the law. I see no good reason to abandon the policy in this respect we have pursued from the beginning of our Government, and hence I shall oppose the adoption of what appears to me as a revival of knownothingism. [Applause.]

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here that I should like to send to the Clerk's desk and have it read, and I should like one minute in which to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be read in the time of the gentleman from Nebraska for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, in line 22, amend by inserting the words "read and" after the word "not;" and strike out the word "read" in line 24; so that section 9, down to the proviso in line 24, will read: "That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not read and write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not speak and understand the English language."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if there is an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment just read has not been offered. It is read merely for the information of the House.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to know whether there is an amendment pending to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. No; but the Chair understands that such an amendment will be offered later on, when it is in order.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I have presented my amendment as a sort of compromise, and it seems to me that it meets the exigencies of the case and will solve the difficulties that are before us. The bill as it now stands makes it necessary for the alien to be able to write his own tongue and the English language, and to be able to read and understand the English language before he can become naturalized. The amendment of my colleague from Nebraska makes it necessary for the alien to be able to speak the English language only before he can become naturalized. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] makes it necessary for the alien to be able to read and write his own language or the English language before he can become naturalized, and nothing more. My amendment goes further than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POLLARD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I have only a minute, and I do not care to be interrupted. My amendment not only provides that the alien must read his own language, but he must also be able to read and write his own language or the English language, and then he must be able to speak and understand the English language. I believe those are conditions that will not prove a hardship. I do not believe they are unreasonable or that they are conditions that any alien ought not to willingly subscribe to in order to become a citizen of this great Republic. If my amendment is adopted, it simply makes it necessary for an alien to be able to either read and write his own or the English language and be able to speak and understand the English language. This certainly is not a severe test for citizenship. I do not believe there is to exceed 2 per cent of the aliens who are from those countries from which desirable immigrants come, and those that make desirable citizens, that can not easily fulfill this requirement. It is the illiterate, riot-precipitating class that should be excluded from citizenship under any and all circumstances. If my amendment is written into law it will not deny citizenship to the great mass of aliens, such as the German, the Frenchman, the Swede, the Norwegian, or the Irishman. It is from these countries that men come who make our very best citizens. I believe we should raise our standard of citizenship in this country. It means something to be a citizen of the United States. I do not believe it should be extended promiscuously and without limitations. Citizenship under Old Glory is the most exalted privilege and the most cherished duty known to mankind. I believe the time has come when reasonable restrictions should be imposed, and I sincerely hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make any extended remarks or occupy any time in discussing this amendment or the bill now under consideration. As a general proposition I do not believe that very much fault need be found with our naturalization laws as they now exist, if they are properly enforced and if the courts perform their duties thereunder in accordance with the spirit and intent of the law. However, if this bill will, as some claim, serve to raise the standard of American citizenship, then I am in favor of its passage. If the proposed amendments will encourage foreigners who come here intending to remain to learn our language and become educated in it, then I am in favor of the amendment.

What I desire, however, at this time to address the Committee of the Whole House upon, very briefly, is an entirely different question, and relates to a different bill. I choose this time to do so, because I do not know that any other time will be available for that purpose. I refer to the rate bill and the so-called "antipass amendment," which has been proposed thereto. I have received very many letters and telegrams from railroad employees protesting against that portion of the proposed amendment which is intended to prohibit the railroad companies from granting passes or any kind of free transportation to employees or to the families of such employees. I am unable to understand why, Mr. Chairman, any such legislation should be enacted. I can not conceive whose business it is, or whom it could possibly harm, for the railroad companies to grant free transportation, if they choose to do so, to their own employees and to the families of such employees. I can see no harm in the practice that has heretofore prevailed in that respect, and I think I can see much of good. In my opinion no other one thing so conduces to the faithful and long continued service of railroad employees as the granting to them of free transportation by the employing companies. If no wrong is done, if no one suffers any injury therefrom, then what right has Congress to interfere to prevent the practice? I aver that under the Constitution of the United States we have no power to prohibit anything which injures no one, which by no possibility could injure anyone, and in which the public has no possible concern. I think Congress might say that no railroad corporation doing an interstate business should grant free transportation to any Member of Congress or to any Government official; that would be a question of public policy, and such legislation might well be enacted. I would vote for it without hesitation, because I believe that a public official should be under personal obligations to no corporation which depends for favors and franchises upon legislation or upon any other official act. In other words, that an employee of the Government should serve it alone, and under no circumstances have two masters. That is one thing, but, in my judgment, free transportation granted by a railroad company to its employees is quite another thing; it is part of the compensation of the employees. It is granted for a purpose which concerns no one in the world except the corporation itself and the employee to whom the favor is granted. It is solely a question between employer and employee, and in which the public has no interest one way or the other. I do not believe that Congress has the right or power to prohibit it, and I do not believe that any public interest requires that Congress should attempt to do so; consequently I have no hesitation in saying that such amendment should be voted down, or at least so changed as not to attempt in any way to interfere with the relations between employer and employee so far as the granting of free transportation by the employer to the employee is concerned. I hope such a change may be made before the rate bill, important as it is, is allowed to become a law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole of section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at this time until the section has been perfected. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the whole section is so objectionable that I think it quite impossible by any amendments that have been offered to make it satisfactory to this House or to the country. Some of the most industrious citizens of this Republic, native and foreign born, can neither read nor write in any language, much less in two. Some of the most prosperous men among the laboring people of the country, among the farmers of the country, are men who can neither read nor write to the extent required in this section. Now, you put in this bill as a necessary qualification for citizenship in the Republic a requirement that a man shall be able to read and write in two languages, a thing that the gentleman in charge of this bill can not do. Why, Mr. Chairman, I know men who have come to this country, who have become among its best citizens, and who have not yet learned to read or write in our language. I saw one of them enlist to fight under the flag of his adopted country. He made a good soldier in a regiment that won fame in our war with Spain. He neither reads nor writes in our language. Yet he is a patriotic citizen, naturalized under the laws as they now exist. Men who neither read nor write make good citizens, whether they be native or foreign born, if they are honest and industrious; and I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] that some of the most dangerous men who come into this country from foreign lands are men who are educated, who are able to promulgate the vicious doctrines of anarchy they have learned under the monarchies of the Old World.

They are the men against whom the Republic needs protection—not against the honest men who come to this country to improve their condition by seizing opportunities that are to be found here for honest labor. Such men are not a menace to the citizenship of this country, but add to it and make it better. I wish they were all able to read and write our language as well as the language of their native country, but many of them can not, and I would not deny those who can not the privilege of citizenship after they have been admitted into the body of our people if they are qualified in all other respects. Love of our country, loyalty to its flag, and frugal habits and industry are the real essentials for good citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to rule that a motion to strike out the section was not in order. I suppose it was in order to have it pending and that other amendments might be offered and voted on first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, without objection, will state the parliamentary situation to the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] has offered an amendment to strike out and insert. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KENNEDY] has offered a substitute, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] has offered an amendment to the substitute. Without objection, the Clerk will report the three propositions.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have ten days within which to insert remarks in the RECORD upon the bill, and to extend remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that can not be done in Committee of the Whole. That is something which has to be done in the House.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I wish you would have the Clerk, for the information of the House, announce whose amendment it is he is reading as he reads it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will comply with the suggestion.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] was again read.

The amendment offered by Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska was again read.

The amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to perfect the text.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 37, noes 57.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and sixty-five Members are present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COCKRAN. What would an affirmative vote be for, Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May we have it read again?

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts), the ayes were 93, and the noes were 34.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. EDWARDS. To make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved by the gentleman from New York that section 9 be stricken out.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. COCKRAN), there were—ayes 45, noes 104.

Mr. BURGESS and several MEMBERS. Tellers!

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman rose to demand tellers.

Mr. BURGESS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURGESS. I demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman from Texas.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers [Mr. BONYNGE and Mr. BURGESS] reported—ayes 51, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether my amendment will be in order, which I submitted to the desk some time since?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment will not be in order in its present form for the reason that it seems to amend certain lines in section 9 which have been stricken out.

Mr. POLLARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the amendment that was adopted, introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska, the following: "That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized"——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late to make that motion.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether I can offer a substitute for the whole paragraph, section 9?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has a new proposition covering the entire subject, he could.

Mr. POLLARD. I would like to submit it and then the Chair can rule on it. I move, then, as a substitute, Mr. Chairman, that the following be adopted for section 9:

That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not read or write in his own language or in the English language and who can not speak and understand the English language: Provided That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise to become citizens of the United States.

I offer that as a substitute for the section.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have just voted upon that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman makes his amendment in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That every final hearing upon such petition shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose, and upon such final hearing of such petition the applicant and witnesses shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 10, insert: "Provided, That whenever, in any Federal court of naturalization, the pressure of business during the last preceding year has become such that causes or proceedings in admiralty, equity, bankruptcy, or at common law or criminal proceedings can not be reached for trial within six months after the date of issue in such actions or proceedings, the judge or justice of such court may enter an order under his hand appointing masters or United States commissioners, before whom all testimony, oaths (except the oaths prescribed by subdivisions 1 and 3 of section 5), affidavits, petitions, and depositions shall be taken, and who shall report their findings of law and fact to the court: Provided further, That such judge or justice may appoint a competent person as stenographer in naturalization proceedings; and the aggregate fees of such master or commissioner and stenographer shall be fixed and apportioned by the court, and shall not exceed the sum of $3 in each proceeding."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, an act has just been passed creating a third district judge for the southern district of New York. It has been necessary to provide three United States district judges for the southern district of New York because of the immense amount of business before the Federal courts about the city of New York. Under this bill as at present formed, if it be necessary to have all of the final hearings in naturalization cases before the judges, it will be necessary for the Federal judges to stop the business of their already overcrowded calendars and to take the testimony in longhand themselves. There are no salaried stenographers in the Federal courts, and under section 23 of this bill a petitioner for naturalization can not even agree to pay a stenographer for taking the testimony without subjecting himself to a penalty and committing a crime. If the United States intervenes in any of these cases, and testimony is to be taken, it must be taken by the judge in longhand, because section 23 of this bill would make it impossible for the petitioner to pay the fees without being guilty of the crime, and the only manner in which stenographers can be had in Federal courts is by the agreement of the parties to pay therefor.

This amendment, which was suggested by some of the Federal judges about New York, makes it possible when their business is at least six months behind for them to appoint masters to take testimony and report the conclusions of law and findings of fact, and provides that the fees shall not exceed $3, and that they shall be apportioned between the master and the stenographer.

Two classes of oaths are excepted. The first is the oath which is to be taken before the clerk, as provided in subdivision 1 of section 5, and the other is the oath provided in subdivision 3 of section 5, where a proposed applicant for citizenship has some title which he is compelled to renounce. The oath renouncing the title must be taken in open court.

In the southern district of New York there are now three Federal judges. In the eastern district there is one, and the calendars of both of these courts are very much crowded. If the judges be compelled, either in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Chicago, or Philadelphia, where the Federal calendars are greatly crowded, to take the testimony in these naturalization cases in longhand, it would be impossible for them to properly discharge the duties of their office and to give the necessary time and attention to the ordinary business of the court that should be given. I hope that the committee will accept this amendment, or, if it desires, extend the time within which courts may be behind in their business before they can order the taking of the depositions and testimony before masters or commissioners instead of taking it themselves. At least it seems to me that some provision should be made that would enable the court, where the United States intervenes, to cross-examine witnesses and summon witnesses to contravert the allegations of the petitioner, to permit the petitioner to pay a stenographer and thus expedite the business of the courts.

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman. I will say that we considered a similar proposition in the committee, and after full consideration voted it down unanimously. As it appears in reference to section 23, that will be removed when we reach that section. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That in any naturalization proceeding in any court exercising jurisdiction under this act either party shall have the right of appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals of the proper circuit, and in any case such as is described by section 5 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, such appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That all appeals under this section shall be taken within forty-five days after the entry of the final order by the court before which such proceeding is had. And in no case in which the United States appears in opposition to the granting of a petition for naturalization shall the court before which such hearing is had, or the clerk thereof, issue a certificate of citizenship within forty-five days after the entry of the final order unless the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization shall file with the clerk of said court a statement to the effect that the United States does not propose to take an appeal. In case an appeal is taken within said time the court shall not issue a certificate in such case except upon and in conformity with the mandate of the court to which such appeal shall have been taken.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the fact that the reference to the appellate court is descriptive only where the appeal may be taken from a United States court, and while it is evidently in the minds of the framers of this section that the appeal should be had to the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction of appeal from the inferior United States court of the district within which is situated the State court, there is nothing that actually says so; and as there is now no circuit court of appeals that has jurisdiction of appeals from inferior State courts, there ought to be some language that would more accurately describe what was in the minds of the framers of the section.

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not know what other language could be employed. It would be the circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the court was located. It says, "of the proper circuit."

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think the gentleman catches the point. It is where the appeal is from the action of the United States court that you are speaking of. It is an appeal from the district court to that court, but it is an appeal from a State court I am speaking of. There is nothing except an inference that would indicate what circuit court of appeals the appeal is to in such a case.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think the same language would apply. It would be the circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the State court was located.

Mr. SHERLEY. That, of course, is in the minds of the drawers of the bill, but it is not in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question.

Mr. BONYNGE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In lines 15, 16, and so forth, I find this language:

And in no case in which the United States appears in opposition to the granting of a petition, etc.

Now, does this bill provide for the appearance of the United States in opposition to every one of these cases on application?

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, no; not at all. We went over that this morning. I will say to the gentleman that the United States district attorney can appear in any case where he thinks there is cause for opposing the application, and we do not stay the proceedings for the forty-five days except in those cases where it is found to be necessary to appear on behalf of the Government in opposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is it that puts the United States attorney on the qui vive to find out this?

Mr. BONYNGE. The Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are going to run it?

Mr. BONYNGE. They give him the information. He runs the case, the same as in any other case where it is necessary to have an attorney.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the United States district attorney put under the jurisdiction and supervision of this Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization for the purposes of this case?

Mr. BONYNGE. No, sir; he is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney-General, and he appears in all cases where the United States is a party, and the United States is a party to proceedings in naturalization.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then it comes right back to the question I asked you a moment ago—if the United States is to be considered as appearing in opposition to the granting of every petition?

Mr. BONYNGE. No. The United States is a party to the proceedings, and it may appear in opposition to any case where it deems it necessary.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last two words in order to ask a question. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor, and his time has not expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply desire to get a little more information in regard to the first part of the section. I think the gentleman, in a sense, misunderstands the proposition I made to him. Of course, it is evident that the intention was to make an appeal from the State court to the same circuit court of appeals that would have jurisdiction in the event that the appeal was taken from the United States district court.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it does not say so, and the language is exceedingly loose.

Mr. BONYNGE. Can the gentleman suggest any language that would convey the idea better than that which the committee have used?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will understand that it is difficult on the floor to consider such a matter so as properly to perfect it; but those in charge of the bill must have had their attention directed to a matter of this kind, and that such language as this, providing for a procedure which, to say the least, is unusual, ought to be very clearly expressed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Ordinarily no right of appeal lies from a State court to the United States court at all, except in certain enumerated cases. Now, you have created a new appeal from an inferior State court to the United States court, and you are doing it in language that, while clear to you gentlemen, because you know what you desire, is not clear to a mere reader of the law, and I suggest to the gentleman that the section had better be passed, if he is not prepared to perfect it.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will say to the gentleman that the section was prepared or was given to us by the Commission, upon which was the Assistant Attorney-General, who had this particular section in charge, and the committee considered it for some time, and no more apt language to convey the idea occurs to me at this moment. The proper circuit court is the circuit court in the district in which the State court is located. I think it is covered by this language.

Mr. SMITH of California. Suppose the State court in which the proceeding was had was part in one Federal district and part in another. Then to which Federal court would the appeal be had?

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last two words. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what are the circumstances under which an appeal is allowed direct to the Supreme Court of the United States? Why should that be, and when is it?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is covered by the act of 1891, creating the circuit court of appeals. By section 5 of that act appeals may be taken direct from the existing district or circuit courts of the United States to the Supreme Court without going through the circuit court of appeals in certain cases involving the Constitution or involving treaty matters, and some other specific cases, but those are the only ones in which naturalization proceedings could by any possibility become involved.

Mr. PERKINS. Could there be any case under the naturalization law in which that question could arise?

Mr. BONYNGE. There might under some treaty, I think.

Mr. PERKINS. Then under that alone would the appeal be allowed to the Supreme Court?

Mr. BONYNGE. Direct to the Supreme Court.

Mr. PERKINS. Either directly or indirectly, any appeal at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman whether there is any provision in the bill as to how the record is to be certified up, or anything as to the procedure on appeal from the State court to the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; because I think the act creating the court of appeals provides for all appeals, and how they may be taken.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the act creating the circuit court of appeals does not provide for such an appeal as this from the State court.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; it does not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think, then, that provision might well be made by inserting herein language to cover the procedure that applies now in cases of appeals from State courts to Federal courts, and thus applying it in this case? In other words, the gentleman has a skeleton arrangement here, with absolutely no information as to how the procedure is to be had.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think that is covered by the statute of 1891, creating the circuit court of appeals, which provides how appeals may be taken to that court. I would have no objection to a short amendment, providing that appeals from the State court to the circuit court of appeals should be governed by that statute, or something to that effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can the gentleman tell the committee just what the practice now is, and how far it may be applicable? The proviso that exists in regard to appeals now in the circuit court of appeals act is a proviso intended for classes of cases entirely different from this sort of a case.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. This case is in a sense an ex parte matter. There are no parties in the strict sense of the word, and it seems to me the committee having in charge this bill ought to have considered the advisability of providing for some method of procedure. As it is now there is nothing but a general statement that an appeal shall be had to the circuit court of appeals for the proper circuit, without any suggestion, even, as to the proper circuit.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, an amendment has been suggested to me which I think will probably meet with the gentleman's approval. It is an amendment drawn by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO]. I shall move to amend by striking out the word "proper," in line 9, page 11, and after the word "circuit," in line 9, to insert the words "in which the naturalization proceeding is pending." I think that is an improvement. I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "proper," in line 9, page 11, and after the word "circuit," in line 9, insert the words "in which the naturalization proceeding is pending."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is now pending, and a motion to strike out the section is not in order until that is disposed of.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, the chairman of the committee, pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am not trying to embarrass the passage of this bill. I am not entirely satisfied with it, but I am quite certain that the committee has not fully considered this section 13. What the committee undertakes to do in the way of providing for the right of appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals will not be improved in the least by the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Colorado. It will only more definitely fix the United States court to which an appeal might be taken, providing the proceeding to be appealed from is pending in a United States court. When gentlemen talk about providing for an appeal from a State court to a United States circuit court, they are talking about an anomaly in the law. There has never been any such thing as an appeal of this character, and it is not provided for in any general law and never was. It is asserted that there are cases taken from the State court to the Supreme Court of the United States, but they are only cases involving a constitutional question, where it is made to appear to the United States Supreme Court that some constitutional question, some question involving some clause of the Constitution is involved. Then that court takes jurisdiction, but it is not in the nature of an appeal as generally understood at all. It is more properly an error proceeding, to obtain a construction of the Constitution of the United States.

There are possibly provisions for a like proceeding where a United States statute is involved. I am not now talking about cases which may be transferred from a State to a United States court for trial where a United States law or the Constitution is involved.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman say that an appeal can not be taken from the highest court of a State, under existing law in any case involving a Federal question pure and simple.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had been listening to what I have said he would not have asked that question, because it would have been wholly unnecessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe that from the courts of unlimited jurisdiction, which alone have power under this bill to naturalize, that any appeal should lie whatsoever to any court?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, I am not speaking about what the bill ought to have in it, but the gentlemen who framed and advocate this bill are undertaking to provide for an appeal from the State court to the United States circuit court of appeals and for a retrial there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am trying to ascertain the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. KEIFER. That can not be done in this way, for the reason that there is no provision for the perfecting of an appeal or any sort of procedure to work it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am trying to ascertain the gentleman's opinion as to whether he thinks there is any need for an appeal in any case.

Mr. KEIFER. I am sure it is better to strike out all provisions relating to an appeal of this kind rather than to confuse the law, if the bill should become a law. I do not know that it is necessary to have an appeal at all. I have not been trying to perfect this bill; but I understand those who have had charge of it claim that they are providing for an appeal from any State court that may take jurisdiction in the matter of naturalization, within a certain number of days, to the United States circuit court of appeals. That I deny can be done. There is no provision here or ever was outside of the bill to that effect, and it is an anomaly to have it in it. If there is any authority to authorize a State court to take jurisdiction of a case or proceeding and for an appeal from it after trial, which I doubt, it certainly would be unwise to attempt it.

Mr. HINSHAW. It involves a Federal question, a question of naturalization. Now, if we invest by law State courts with authority in Federal questions, why can not we by a statute give an appeal to a Federal court?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks a question that I will answer. I answer it by the general practice that there never has been, and for convenience and practicability there never will be, a provision of this kind with reference to ordinary litigation. I understand perfectly well, Mr. Chairman, that where we have a case pending in a State court that involves a Federal question we may go to a Federal court not by appeal, but for the purpose of review and by transfer, as I have tried to state. How would an appeal from a State to a Federal court be taken should this bill become a law with this section 13 in it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the whole section ought to go out of the bill, in my judgment. There is a temptation in this bill to a partisan district attorney to select out of the list of those who have been recently naturalized such as he would want to prevent from voting at the next election. An appeal can be taken by him and all of those individuals thus selected would be prevented from voting. It is much safer to leave this whole matter as it is now, entirely a question of fact and law with the court in which the naturalization is granted. It is proposed to open up this question so that any alien who seeks naturalization will at once become a party to a lawsuit ending only in the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a wholly unnecessary proposition, and the short way to dispose of this section will be to strike it out absolutely.

We can certainly trust these courts. They have to hear these cases, they are tried on their merits, they are tried on the evidence, and under the provision of law the district attorney may appear and controvert the facts in the court. That ought to be the end of it, but thousands of cases—enough cases to absolutely overwhelm the Supreme Court of the United States—could be piled up from any single State. The courts formerly in England had no jurisdiction of appeals in criminal cases. In criminal cases a man was tried for the crime and the trial court was the final judge of the case. We have opened up in this country a wide arena of appeals to such an extent as to overwhelm the courts and to prevent the speedy administration of justice in all criminal cases. It is proposed to add to the appeals every case where a man may seek naturalization. The court before which his case is presented, which sees the witnesses, which sees the applicant and determines that he possesses the requisite qualifications, ought to be the final judge of the law and the fact. If the question may then be relitigated and taken to the circuit court of appeals at some distant point involving the applicant in a great expense, it would work a wholly unnecessary hardship, and I think this whole section ought to go out.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HINSHAW. It has been alleged at different times that courts themselves have been corrupt in regard to naturalization of aliens, and therefore there would be no chance to reverse the decisions of these fraudulent courts if this section is stricken out.

Mr. LACEY. But the contrary abuse is so much worse than the occasional and very rare corruption of a court that it would be infinitely worse than the difficulty that it seeks to remedy. Last year in Iowa I recall an instance where fifteen or twenty fraudulent naturalization papers were obtained. Every one of the applicants have been indicted for the crime of perjury.

The cases are rare where a court has been found corrupt. A partisan district attorney would be more likely to take a partisan appeal than would a court be to do injustice.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am going to ask unanimous consent that this section may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. LACEY. Very well; and I hope my friend, after further thought, will pass the section out without prejudice.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to do whatever is necessary to do in order to get five minutes. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] will agree to move to strike out the whole section, I will yield back my five minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. I have asked unanimous consent to pass this section without prejudice.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that is the status of it, I want to say what I have to say.

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] in what he says, and I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] in what he says. This section undoubtedly ought to go out. Let us see what a preposterous position we are putting ourselves in before the country. We are providing here, for one thing, that the man who gets into controversy about naturalization shall have the right, if he is in a Federal court, to appeal to the Federal circuit court of appeals. Nobody doubts we can confer that jurisdiction. But, so far as the language in this section goes, it seems to imply that if the proceeding is in a State court he still can appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals.

I say that it is absolutely preposterous to have an appeal lie from the circuit court of Iowa, if that is what you call it up there, or the district court of Kansas, or the circuit court of Missouri, to an inferior Federal court. It is absolutely ridiculous. Or, go further, and suppose the man prosecutes an appeal, if there is any machinery for it, from the nisi prius State courts to the supreme court of that State, then you put us into the ridiculous attitude of saying to the country that a man may appeal from the supreme court of one of these States to an inferior Federal court.

While I am at it I want to say another thing. There has been a good deal of insinuation and assertion here in the course of this debate, from the first of it to the last, that the State courts are not to be as much relied upon as the Federal courts. I do not believe a word of it, and if I had to take my chances in any court to get justice, I would rather go to the State court of any State in the Union than to go to the Federal courts. It seems to me that some people are getting daffy on the whole subject anyhow. We have managed to wigwag along in this country for several years without tying everybody up with statutes that nobody can understand, and we might manage to wigwag along until Congress meets in December, under the same statutes we have now. [Applause.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand unanimous consent has been granted to pass this section without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard the request made.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask unanimous consent that this section may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. SIMS. Without an explanation, I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] asks unanimous consent that this section may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Without explanation, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I have concluded from the debate that possibly it does require some amendment in reference to the proceeding for the appeal. You can not prepare such an amendment in two minutes, and therefore I have asked unanimous consent that it may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. SIMS. My idea was to vote on it while the discussion was fresh and we knew what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of California. Reserving the right to object, I would like to call the committee's attention to another equally ridiculous feature in this, and maybe they can doctor that up when they get in the committee room. The bill as it now reads provides that if the district attorney appears and offers any objection, however formal it may be, it stays judgment, as you would say, or it stays the issuance of the certificate of naturalization for forty-five days. Now, he might go in and make the appearance in good faith and find there was nothing in it, and yet he is absolutely powerless to withdraw that and allow the matter to go to final judgment, as we say, or to the issuance of the certificate, for it says that it shall stay the matter for forty-five days, "unless the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization shall file with the clerk of said court a statement to the effect that the United States does not propose to take an appeal." I think that should be doctored, too.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. It is Saturday night, and we want to get ready to go to church.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on another subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri withhold his motion for that purpose?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 78.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 88.

So the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this section may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That it is hereby made the duty of the clerk of each and every court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization matters under the provisions of this act to keep and file a duplicate of each declaration of intention made before him and to send to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization at Washington, within thirty days after the issuance of a certificate of citizenship, a duplicate of such certificate, and to make and keep on file in his office a stub for each certificate so issued by him, whereon shall be entered a memorandum of all the essential facts set forth in such certificate. It shall also be the duty of the clerk of each of said courts to report to the said Bureau, within thirty days after the final hearing and decision of the court, the name of each and every alien who shall be denied naturalization, and to furnish to said Bureau duplicates of all petitions within thirty days after the filing of the same, and certified copies of such other proceedings and orders instituted in or issued out of said court affecting or relating to the naturalization of aliens as may be required from time to time by the said Bureau.

In case any such clerk or officer acting under his direction shall refuse or neglect to comply with any of the foregoing provisions he shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $25 in each and every case in which such violation or omission occurs, and the amount of such forfeiture may be recovered by the United States in an action of debt against such clerk.

Clerks of courts having and exercising jurisdiction in naturalization matters shall be responsible for all blank certificates of citizenship received by them from time to time from the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and shall account for the same to the said Bureau whenever required so to do by such Bureau. No certificate of citizenship received by any such clerk which may be defaced or injured in such manner as to prevent its use as herein provided shall in any case be destroyed, but such certificate shall be returned to the said Bureau; and in case any such clerk shall fail to return or properly account for any certificate furnished by the said Bureau, as herein provided, he shall be liable to the United States in the sum of $50, to be recovered in an action of debt, for each and every certificate not properly accounted for or returned.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BONYNGE. If amendments are to be offered to this section, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. RUCKER. I will not offer one now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15442, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WOOD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th of December, 1905, I introduced a bill to erect a monument to commemorate the battle of Princeton. In this distinguished body of official representatives of the American people, in the presence of men so well versed in American history, and who are so familiar with the events of our great Revolutionary struggle, it is not necessary to say more than a word as to the importance of the battle of Princeton. It played a large, conspicuous, and decisive part in the illustrious and forever memorable war that brought about the independence of the American colonies. It marked the crisis of the Revolution. It was the dividing point, so historians concede, between defeat and victory. It was there that new inspiration brought fresh hope and courage to the disheartened forces of the colonies and lighted anew the fast-ebbing flame of heroism and devotion in the breasts of those brave patriots. And it was from Princeton that the colonial troops marched forward over a pathway that was ever brightening, to culminate at length in the glorious triumph of Yorktown.

Nearly one hundred and thirty years have passed since that time, and yet there is no monument in bronze or marble or granite to commemorate the dauntless valor and heroism displayed on that occasion by our colonial troops, or to testify to the magnificent military skill and strategy there shown by the commander in chief, whose reputation from that time forth as a great military character attracted the attention of all Europe.

Nearly all the other great historic battle grounds of the Revolution have their appropriate monuments. This is the last to appeal for similar recognition to the patriotic sentiment of Congress and the American people.

Princeton will be for all time one of the great historic places of America. It was there that the Continental Congress held its sessions. It was there that the commander in chief issued his proclamation of peace with Great Britain. The first president of its college, John Witherspoon, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The old walls of her academic buildings still bear the imprint of British bullets, and the patriotic wisdom of her founders made imprints deeper and still more lasting on the beginnings of our American life.

Princeton is known all over the globe as one of the oldest and greatest of all our educational institutions. A monument in that old academic town would forever be an incentive to the truest and loftiest patriotism on the part of the thousands and tens of thousands of youths who in the years to come shall go forth from her academic halls to play their part in developing, maintaining, and perpetuating the free institutions whose right to exist was there, in so large a measure, achieved.

On the 3d day of January, 1887, the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the battle of Princeton, the Princeton Battle Monument Association was organized. The one great patriotic endeavor of this association during all the years, nearly a score, that have elapsed since that time has been to rear a monument that should be a shrine for American patriotism and that should be the embodiment of the great and patriotic memories that will forever cluster about that historic place.

This bill provides for the appropriation of $30,000 on condition that a like amount be raised by the Princeton Battle Monument Association. Fifteen thousand dollars of this amount have already been appropriated by the State of New Jersey, and the balance will speedily be raised by this association. Bills having a similar object in view passed the Fiftieth, the Fifty-second, the Fifty-seventh, and the Fifty-eighth Congresses, and this bill has been heartily recommended by the Committee on the Library of this House.

No better investment, I take it, could be made in the interest of real patriotism; none that would bring returns of larger and truer value; none that would pay greater dividends, than the appropriation of this amount in the recognition of the mighty deeds wrought in that soul-stirring period of our colonial strife by the mighty heroes of our Revolutionary conflict.

STATEHOOD.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the report of the conferees on the statehood bill for printing in the RECORD, with the statement accompanying the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan presents a conference report and statement for printing under the rules.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged resolution. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rule or resolution heretofore adopted on January 25, 1906, sending H. R. 12707, commonly know as the "statehood bill," to conference, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded and vacated as to all matters and things therein contained, and that the conferees on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, discharged from further consideration or action thereon; and it shall be in order for the House immediately, without debate, intervening motion, or appeal, to proceed to vote upon the following proposition: Shall the House agree to and concur in the Senate amendments to H. R. 12707, known as the "statehood bill?"

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that is not privileged or parliamentary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the position of this bill is that the Senate conferees have the papers, and under the practice and precedents the report is there first made. Even if it presented a question of privilege at this stage and the House had the papers, the Chair doubts if this would be in order; but it is clearly out of order, because the report presented here is presented for printing only. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BONYNGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MURPHY. That is not a square deal.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 4, 1906.

Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

We come into Thy presence, our Father, with hearts veiled with sorrow. But it is not as if Thy love were taken from us or Thy power had failed, for we are still Thy children, Thou still our Father.

Renew our days as of old. Cause the light of Thy countenance to shine upon us. Let Thy grace strengthen us, and through the cloud lead us into the light that never was on land or sea. So, our Father, wilt Thou turn our mourning into joy and our tears into thanksgiving. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR GORMAN.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in the absence of the surviving Senator from Maryland, it becomes my painful duty to announce the death of Senator GORMAN. The end which awaits us all found him this morning. At his residence in this city, surrounded by his stricken family, he passed from the strife and bitterness of this world to the peace and rest of a better one.

I would ask the Senate to honor his long and faithful service as a member of this body by holding a public funeral in the Senate Chamber except for the fact that he has left instruction that his burial shall be a simple one. In obedience to his wishes, I forbear to make any request further than to ask the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

At some later time Senator RAYNER, who learned of Senator GORMAN'S death when it was too late for him to reach the Chamber for this morning's session, will ask us to set apart a day upon which the Senate will pay a fitting tribute to the memory and services of our deceased associate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ARTHUR PUE GORMAN, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That a committee of seventeen Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. GORMAN, which will take place at his late residence Thursday, June 7, at 11 o'clock, and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect that his remains be removed from his late home to the place of interment in Oak Hill Cemetery for burial, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect; and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions read by the Secretary.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee, under the second resolution, Mr. RAYNER, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. HALE, Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. TELLER, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. CLAY, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. KEAN, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. CLARK of Montana, and Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as a mark of further respect to the memory of Senator GORMAN, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 5, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 4, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

PORT ARTHUR A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10715) to establish an additional collection district in the State of Texas, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10715) to establish an additional collection district in the State of Texas, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional collection district in the State of Texas shall be, and is hereby, established, to be known as the district of Sabine, to comprise all of that portion of the State of Texas formerly embraced in the district of Galveston and now hereby detached therefrom, beginning on the Gulf of Mexico at the center of the stream of Sabine Pass; thence north with the center of the stream of Sabine Pass to Sabine Lake; thence with the center of the stream of Sabine Lake to a point directly opposite to the Sabine River; thence north with the east shores of the Sabine River to the north boundary line of Shelby County, Tex.; thence west to the Neches River; thence down said river with its west shores to a north boundary line of Jefferson County; thence in a westerly direction with the said boundary line to the east boundary line of Liberty County, Tex.; thence south to the Gulf of Mexico; thence in an easterly direction along the Gulf shores to the place of beginning; that Port Arthur, in the county of Jefferson, shall be the port of entry for said district, and Sabine, in the county of Jefferson, shall be a subport of entry: Provided, That there shall be conveyed to the United States, free of cost, a valid title to the line of water communication between Taylors Bayou and Sabine Pass, known as the "Port Arthur Ship Canal," together with a valid title to the existing turning basin and to the slip known as slip No. 3 in Taylors Bayou, and to the artificial slip on which the lumber dock of the Port Arthur Canal and Dock Company is built, and there shall also be ceded by the State of Texas to the United States exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty over said waterway, basin, and slips; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept the said waterways as the property of the United States upon the delivery to him of a clear and indefeasible title thereto and upon proof being furnished to him of legal cession by the State of Texas of jurisdiction and sovereignty as aforesaid; and the said waterways shall thereupon become free public waters of the United States, and be subject to the laws heretofore enacted and that may be hereafter enacted by Congress for the maintenance, preservation, protection, and regulation of navigable waters: Provided further, That the company or corporation conveying title to said canal as aforesaid shall also convey to the United States, free of cost, the fee to a strip of land 150 feet wide along the westerly margin of the canal, except that where the right of way of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company prevents the transfer of such strip of land along the westerly margin of said canal there shall be conveyed such strip on the easterly margin thereof as may be necessary to make up such 150 feet of width, with the reservation that until Congress shall have authorized and provided for the enlargement and widening of said canal the said company or corporation, its successors or assigns, shall have the right to control, occupy, and use the said strip of land and every part thereof in the same manner and to the same extent as before the execution and delivery of the conveyance, and also the right to transfer, lease, sell, quitclaim, or otherwise dispose of said property and every part thereof, subject to the grant made to the United States: And provided further, That the person or persons, companies, or corporations owning or controlling docks, wharves, or terminals in, along, or upon said canal, or in, along, or upon any basins, slips, or channels connected therewith, directly or indirectly, shall by valid contract agree that the charges for the use of said docks, wharves, and terminals shall be such as the Secretary of War may from time to time approve: And provided further, That this act shall take effect only when the foregoing requirements shall have been fully complied with to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That a collector for the district of Sabine aforesaid shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, who shall hold his office upon the terms and for the time prescribed by law for the like offices in other districts. The said collector shall reside at Port Arthur, the port of entry, and shall receive a salary of $1,000 a year in addition to the fees allowed by law, the total compensation not to exceed in the aggregate $3,000.

SEC. 3. That Sabine, in the State of Texas, shall be, and is hereby, made a subport of entry and delivery in the customs district of Sabine, and a customs officer, or such other officers, shall be stationed at said subport, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services and receive such compensation as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I demand a second.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Nebraska will take their places as tellers.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to a second being considered as ordered?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which was introduced by myself early in the session to create a new collection district in southeast Texas and to establish a port of entry therein at Port Arthur. There have been numerous committee hearings upon this bill, and there has been so much printed matter in reference to it distributed among the Members of the House that the most of them, I should think, are somewhat familiar with the conditions at Port Arthur. The opposition at a hearing upon this bill before the Ways and Means Committee freely admitted that a port of entry was needed in that section of southeast Texas. Their only objection to this bill was that they wanted the port of entry at a different place. They wanted it established at Sabine instead of at Port Arthur. We have made ample proof, Mr. Speaker, that a port of entry is badly needed at Port Arthur. Instead of being an expense to the Government, a port of entry there would be a source of revenue for the Government. A city not more than 9 years of age has sprung up there and with it an immense business. The Government receipts for dues, clearances, etc., at Port Arthur for the year 1905 amounted to $8,361.97. There is an immense shipping business done through the port. There are twenty-eight ocean-going ships which are owned by people who live in Port Arthur. Under the present conditions the owners of these ships are put to great inconvenience and expense from the fact that the masters of the ships have to go once annually in person to the collector of customs at the port of Galveston and once each time a ship changes from foreign to domestic trade.

The trip from Port Arthur to Galveston and back, including the time necessarily spent in Galveston in obtaining clearance papers, consumes three days' time, during a part of which demurrage is charged on the vessel. This business can not be transacted within less time by mail. Such delay is not only a very great inconvenience, but a great hardship as well upon the owners of the vessels. The exports from Port Arthur have increased year by year since the beginning of shipments through the canal leading out from that place to deep water at Sabine Pass. Within five years, from 1901 to 1905, inclusive, over $40,000,000 worth of traffic has gone through Port Arthur. The post-office receipts in that city show a most healthful state of affairs, the amount of the same for the year ending June 30, 1905, being $9,917.51. The city now has a population of between 5,000 and 6,000 people, with all the modern conveniences, including paved streets, waterworks, an ice plant, electric lights, etc. They have a large grain elevator situated there with a storage capacity of 500,000 bushels, three oil refineries with tremendous capacity, a rice mill, and many other very important industries; and the city is populated by people who are wide awake, intelligent, and energetic. They have spent their money freely in the establishment of the great industries mentioned, and having created by their enterprise an immense business, I think it but just that they should not be hampered by lack of facilities for handling the same.

There is a private canal leading from near Port Arthur to the Government's deep water at Sabine Pass. This canal is 7¼ miles long, 25 feet deep, and 183 feet wide. There is now being constructed by the Government a canal leading from the mouths of the Sabine and Neches rivers to the mouth of Taylors Bayou, at which point it will connect with said private canal. The owners of this private canal, upon condition that the bill now before the House is passed during the present session of the Congress, propose to cede the same, with its turning basins and slips, to the Government. They also obligate themselves to make valid title to the Government to 150 feet of land lying along said canal, provided the Government may determine hereafter to widen the same. These owners of the private canal were perfectly willing to retain ownership thereof and maintain said canal at its present depth, but made the alternative proposition to cede the canal to the United States that those who object to a port of entry being established upon a private waterway might no longer have ground for such objection. This occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, as most liberal action on the part of the owners of the private canal. Nothing could be more so. They feel the great importance to the business interests of Port Arthur and the country tributary thereto of the establishment of the port of entry. I feel this great importance, too, and I may say that this feeling is shared by every Member from Texas in Congress, including our two Senators. My opinion is that a great majority of the people whom I have the honor of representing favor the passage of this bill; and I must think that, upon a careful consideration of the facts set forth in the committee's report upon it no Member of this House will dispute the fact that the showing made by Port Arthur in support of her claim will amply justify the House in passing the bill, and I trust there will not be any hesitation in doing so.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] such time as he desires.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I find myself unable to agree to the wisdom or expediency of this proposed legislation. As is well known, I suppose, to the Members of the House, Sabine Pass is located on Sabine River, about 2 miles from the Gulf coast. The Government has built a fine harbor at the pass by dredging out the river and extending the works into the Gulf, so that they have a good flow of water and a good depth for large vessels. Sabine Pass has been a port of entry since 1838. Since that time a private corporation has built what is known as the "Port Arthur Canal." It leaves the Sabine River some 5 or 6 miles above Sabine Pass and extends up into the country from 5 to 6 miles to Port Arthur, located about 12 miles north of Sabine Pass. They have built a canal there drawing about 25 feet of water, with a width of about eighty-odd feet, I think, on the bottom and 110 feet on the top, and by means of that they have been able to take vessels up to Port Arthur, and a considerable commerce has grown up through this private canal. The reason that this city or village was started and this port established at Port Arthur grew out of rival real estate booms in Sabine Pass and Port Arthur. The excuse was given for it that a storm had swept Sabine Pass and destroyed considerable of the town—the same storm, I believe, which damaged Galveston so materially. It was claimed that that storm did not reach to Port Arthur, but this has been strenuously denied, as has almost every fact in the case, before the committee. There was not much of Port Arthur there to be destroyed at the time of that storm, as I recollect it. Now, they come in and ask us to make a port of entry at Port Arthur and to make it a collection district. Of course, I have been in favor of abolishing some of the collection districts and not adding to them. But every exigency of commerce, every public question, could be met in this case by making Port Arthur a subport and giving to that subport the privileges of collecting duties and of clearing and entering vessels and all that sort of thing without adding the expense and trouble of a new collection district.

This proposed legislation met with an insuperable objection in the first place, because Port Arthur was at the head of this private canal. It was suggested, and after long consultation we had an offer that the Government should be invested with this private canal free of charge. Well, that struck some of the committee as being an offer that ought to be accepted, but they claim that the private canal as it is built cost $1,300,000. Now, that canal is not at present sufficient to accommodate the commerce that is coming to Port Arthur at this time. It is not safe for two vessels to undertake to pass each other coming and going through this private channel as it exists to-day. They have to clear the canal from one end to the other before a vessel can start in the canal to reach the supposed harbor, which contains a basin about 200 feet wide at one end and 500 at the other and about 1,800 feet long, where the vessels have to be turned by tugs and where no two vessels can turn in this harbor at the same time without danger of being destroyed. Of course if we take this magnificent gift of $1,300,000 worth of canal, it means that the Government is to improve it in the near future by at least doubling its width, and that fact struck the committee and those in favor of the bill so forcibly that they put into this proposed cession the right of way to dig out and double this canal, and these people who own the canal are to give us not only the canal, but are to give us sufficient land on one side of it to double the canal when we get ready to do the work, which means another $1,300,000. It means additional improvements, it means dredging every year, estimated by the Engineer Department at the minimum of $10,000. It means endless expense for the Government of the United States, and all for what? Why, in order that Port Arthur may be advertised throughout the world as a port at the head of a collection district, when, if you made it a subport, with the privileges that have been given to such places at Tacoma and Seattle, it would answer all the requirements of commerce, all the conveniences of the public, and all the interests of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the whole case in a nutshell. I do not believe in the bill. I do not believe in this kind of legislation; I do not believe in going in with these gentlemen in their land schemes and advertising such a place as Port Arthur at the expense of the Government of the United States. Some 40,000 acres of land, more or less, are held at Port Arthur by a private land company. One gentleman was conspicuously before the committee advocating this bill, and it turned out that he had got his interest in the land company within a year. It turned out that he was interested in the railroad company and in the canal company six or eight years ago, and yet he never thought of coming to Washington (although this bill had been before the committee for the last six or seven years), never thought of coming here to advocate the bill until after he got hold of part of this land scheme located at Port Arthur, and he has been numerously in and out, persisting day by day for the passage of this bill. I do not want to be a partner to any such scheme as that, and therefore I said in the committee that I was opposed to the bill, and I propose to vote against it to-day.

Mr. McMORRAN. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Ways and Means have recommended the passage of this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Why certainly; it comes here on the report of a majority of the committee.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to be drawn into a controversy which is really nothing but a quarrel between two localities and between large and conflicting financial interests. Nevertheless, I am satisfied that the merits of the question lie with Port Arthur, and that this bill should pass. Port Arthur is the place where much the larger share of business now going through Sabine Pass is transacted and the prospect is that in the future the proportion transacted at Port Arthur will be even larger. Neither of these localities is entirely safe from cyclones or tidal waves, but of the two Port Arthur is much the safer, and it is a sort of general rule the world over that the farther inland a port can be reached by a convenient channel the farther inland it is located. I have twice visited this locality, and must say that in the year 1904, the date of my latest visit, Sabine Pass was as dead a place as I have ever seen.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio how many feet above sea level Port Arthur is?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Where the village is, perhaps 4 to 6 feet.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will ask the gentleman whether or not Sabine is not higher—that is, the altitude greater?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. A portion of it is, due in part to the deposit on the shore of the spoil from the dredged-out channel.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. But, as a matter of fact, taking it generally, Sabine is more elevated—more above the sea level than Port Arthur?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; because there is an elevation at the town of Port Arthur the natural height of which is greater than at Sabine.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will ask the gentleman how far inland Port Arthur is?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The length of the canal is 7.2 miles. The distance inland is 12 to 15 miles. I am not able to state the exact distance.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. This port, which it is proposed to make a port of entry, is inland from the bay 12 miles.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Inland from the Gulf.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. And it is reached now by a private canal.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Which, by the terms of this bill, is to be turned over to the United States Government and which was constructed at a cost of perhaps a million dollars by private parties.

Mr. SULZER. One million three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Which, by the terms of the bill, it must turn over free gratis to the Government, provided it is made a port of entry.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. But it is true that at this time the canal, which is the only means of reaching Port Arthur, is owned by private parties.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. At present it is.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Can the gentleman state to the House what the cost of maintaining this canal has been each year in the past?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not know what the cost has been in the past, because it has been under private control. The estimate made by General Mackenzie, chief of engineers, is that it would cost $10,000 a year or thereabouts.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. So that if this private canal is ceded to the United States, the total cost of maintenance will be not less than $10,000 per year, which will be saddled on the United States and added to the cost of maintaining that port?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Before answering the gentleman's question I will say that the question is not where the ground is highest, but where the business is transacted, and where it can be transacted most conveniently and safely. The answer to that is "at Port Arthur." As regards the $10,000 a year, I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that with a commerce of considerable size it is really trifling. In response to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I would say that I do not anticipate that for many years to come it will be necessary to incur the expense of widening that canal. It is sufficient for present uses. If it is widened or must be widened, it will be because the business is greatly increased and would justify enlargement.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, will the gentleman from Ohio answer the question I asked—that is, if the fact of making Port Arthur a port of entry will not be to place upon the United States Government the expense of at least $10,000 per annum to maintain a private canal?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have already answered that question, but will again answer it by saying yes; but that amount is trifling in comparison with the commerce involved. The expense of maintaining the pass below is probably $50,000. Now, there would be very little commerce on the expenditure of that $50,000 if it only reached Sabine Pass. The only justification for that expenditure at Sabine Pass to-day is the commerce at Port Arthur.

Mr. BURGESS. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska in reply to his position that if this bill passes there will be saddled upon the National Government the expense of maintaining a private canal, and the answer to that lies in this——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURGESS. I will ask unanimous consent for two minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I object to unanimous consent on suspension day. Let the gentleman yield time.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I yield two minutes more to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. BURGESS. The answer to the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska lies in this. It is true that if this bill passes a private canal lying wholly within the State of Texas will pass to the Government, and of course the Government must of necessity assume the cost of its maintenance, but the last river and harbor bill carried an appropriation of $411,000 added to a previous appropriation of $125,000, making $536,000 to construct a channel 9 feet deep leading from Orange and Beaumont to a connection with this canal along the west shore of Sabine Lake, and that we must maintain in the interest of commerce of those cities and localities, and this canal either ought to be ceded to the Government or the parties who own it will have the right under the laws of Texas to tax commerce flowing through it enough to maintain it. So I say it is better, it is right and proper that the Federal Government should take it over when it can get it for nothing and maintain it than to tax the commerce flowing through it to maintain it together with the difficulties that may arise from the maintenance of a part of a waterway under private ownership and part of a waterway under public ownership. If this bill is passed the whole waterway to the open sea will belong to the Government. It will be charged of course with its maintenance, but the commerce that flows through it will be untaxed and the whole people, not only the State of Texas, but of all the Northwest who ship down the Kansas City Southern out to the sea, will be benefited by it. That is the answer to the gentleman from Nebraska. [Applause.] And the fact that he hails from Nebraska, from the great wheat fields there that ship out through these lines to the open sea and the European ports ought to stop his mouth, and these facts which I have given, if they get into his head, ought to stop his mouth, and it is to the interest of Nebraska and Texas and all States tributary to this section that the bill be passed. That is the answer to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. How much time has each side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has ten minutes and the gentleman from Texas nine.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. The gentleman from Texas had better take some time now. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas does not desire to use more time, I do.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Very well, I will ask the gentleman from Texas what sort of a harbor there is at Port Arthur?

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I think there is a good harbor at Port Arthur.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. How large is it?

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Has not the gentleman read the statement of facts in the committee's report?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. The House has not time to read the statement of facts, and perhaps the gentleman knows.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. The committee's report is before the House, but I will say it is large enough to meet the demands of commerce, and there is an immense commerce coming through that port, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that there is no harbor at Port Arthur except what has been dug there by artificial means?

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, some years ago the State of Texas changed its laws on account of severe storms immediately on the Gulf coast——

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I did not ask the gentleman for a speech. I asked him a question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must settle it among themselves. [Laughter.] The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I will answer the gentleman's questions specifically.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. For an answer to my question.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that during the past five years over $40,000,000 worth of business was cleared from Port Arthur, and over $14,000,000 was cleared for the last fiscal year. This is a most commendable bill and ought to pass at once.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I am not asking the gentleman about the amount of business done there.

Mr. SULZER. I thought the gentleman wanted information.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I do, on the point I am inquiring about.

Mr. SULZER. It appears to me the gentleman is trying to embarrass the gentleman from Texas because he is a new Member.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I am a new Member, and it does not embarrass me.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman apparently was trying to embarrass him, but appears to be embarrassed now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. No, Mr. Speaker; because if I wanted information I would not ask it from the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] The gentleman in charge of this bill has not given the House any satisfactory reason why the bill should pass. This is not a question as to whether this port shall be at Port Arthur or Sabine. It is a question whether this bill shall pass, and whether there shall be an additional port at all. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we do not need an additional port at Port Arthur. And I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS] that the gentleman from Nebraska knows what the interests of Nebraska require; and if he does not, he will not go to Texas to get his information.

Mr. BATES. Is it not a fact that this measure now before the House has been approved by a favorable report from the great Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes, sir; I believe so; and nobody has a greater respect for the Ways and Means Committee than I have.

Mr. SULZER. And also by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now we have some more interpolation from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, it is an easy thing to get through this House bills which create additional offices and make additional expense.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that instead of creating additional offices and expense by the creation of this port, the revenues to be derived from the establishment of the port at this point will be more than sufficient to meet any expenses that may be created? [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. That, Mr. Speaker, is an evasion of the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking you the question.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will answer you. I will say that the commerce at Port Arthur will be there whether it is made a port of entry or not. I say that Sabine is a subport now, and it has been sufficient for all purposes and will be sufficient for all purposes for the commerce that will come to that part of Texas, whether Port Arthur is made a port of entry or whether this bill passes or does not pass. Mr. Speaker, I want to know what instances there are in the United States where inland towns have been taken and made ports of entry, with subports on the open Gulf, with natural harbors suitable for all purposes?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the situation of Astoria, on the Columbia River, and Portland, which is on the Willamette River, a branch of the Columbia, and about 100 miles from the mouth, while Astoria is very near the mouth? I would like to call his attention to Philadelphia and the ports below it on the Delaware River, on the way to Delaware Bay and the open ocean.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Are they made original ports?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly; Philadelphia is and so is Portland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, Mr. Speaker, this House should not pass this bill under suspension of the rules, because it provides that this canal shall be ceded. It is high time to make this inland town a port of entry when that has been done, and I protest against the creation of that port, against the establishment of more offices, against the cost of the maintenance of that canal, and against the whole system which will make a port of entry of an inland town when the open harbor is 12 miles away on the Gulf.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell the House, while he is objecting to the establishment of a port at this point because of the expense to be incurred for the maintenance of the canal by the Government, how much the Government spent on the canal at Sabine and how much it spends annually for its maintenance?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I do not think that has anything to do with the question.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Because the question here is as to the additional expense.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, if the Government had not spent the money which it has spent in making and maintaining the harbor at Sabine you could not get within 15 miles of Port Arthur in a john boat. The expenditure which the gentleman is talking about, which amounts to nearly $5,000,000, every dollar of which has been appropriated since I have been in Congress, was expended to make at Sabine a harbor which has been one of the best harbors on all the southern coast, and there is a complete harbor. The other proposition is to go 12 miles up a channel, part of it a public channel and part of it a private channel; that is all.

Mr. MADDEN. It will all be public when it is ceded to the Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Nobody knows whether it will be ceded or not.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman ought not to make that statement, because the act does not take effect until the canal is ceded to the Government. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes' time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY].

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means after exhaustive investigation in which both sides were heard. It has the approval of the Secretary. It has my own personal approval [applause]——

A MEMBER. That is enough. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota (continuing). For several reasons.

On the Gulf coast, between Galveston and New Orleans, a distance of several hundred miles, there are no harbors of any consequence, except at the place referred to in the bill. Tributary to this harbor is a great and growing section of country. The usefulness of this harbor is seen in the fact that within a few years there has grown up at Port Arthur a thriving little city, destined, I believe, to be a considerable city. To accommodate the rapidly growing trade every proper encouragement should be given to the upbuilding of this shipping point.

I admit that I have a selfish reason, too, for supporting the pending bill. I support it because I believe that in the upbuilding of Port Arthur much of good will come to the section of country lying between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, in which section lies the great State of Minnesota, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor. That great section lies away out at the heart of the continent, far from the ocean. Necessarily we have a long haul for our exports and imports. Most of our surplus products for export now move eastward to the Atlantic ports. Another exit toward the Gulf would mean additional competition in transportation, and, therefore, lowering of freight rates. In my judgment it is of the utmost value to that interior country to have this harbor and the railways leading to it developed, and, therefore, in the interest of all that part of the country in which I live I support this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is there a subport at Sabine now?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes; there is a subport at Sabine.

Mr. HINSHAW. And is it necessary to go from Port Arthur to Galveston to arrange the papers now, or can you go to Sabine?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The testimony before the committee is that the captains of the vessels now have to go to Galveston to get their clearance papers. That is exactly the necessity for the port instead of a subport. The testimony before the committee shows that there are twenty-eight vessels owned at Port Arthur.

I yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken (two-thirds voting in the affirmative), the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

STOCK YARDS AND THEIR PRODUCTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

The message is as follows:

The Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of Mr. James Bronson Reynolds and Commissioner Charles P. Neill, the special committee whom I appointed to investigate into the conditions in the stock yards of Chicago and report thereon to me. This report is of a preliminary nature. I submit it to you now because it shows the urgent need of immediate action by the Congress in the direction of providing a drastic and thoroughgoing inspection by the Federal Government of all stock yards and packing houses and of their products, so far as the latter enter into interstate or foreign commerce. The conditions shown by even this short inspection to exist in the Chicago stock yards are revolting. It is imperatively necessary in the interest of health and of decency that they should be radically changed. Under the existing law it is wholly impossible to secure satisfactory results.

When my attention was first directed to this matter an investigation was made under the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture. When the preliminary statements of this investigation were brought to my attention they showed such defects in the law and such wholly unexpected conditions that I deemed it best to have a further immediate investigation by men not connected with the Bureau, and accordingly appointed Messrs. Reynolds and Neill. It was impossible under the existing law that satisfactory work should be done by the Bureau of Animal Industry. I am now, however, examining the way in which the work actually was done.

Before I had received the report of Messrs. Reynolds and Neill I had directed that labels placed upon any package of meat food products should state only that the carcass of the animal from which the meat was taken had been inspected at the time of slaughter. If inspection of meat food products at all stages of preparation is not secured by the passage of the legislation recommended, I shall feel compelled to order that inspection labels and certificates on canned products shall not be used hereafter.

The report shows that the stock yards and packing houses are not kept even reasonably clean, and that the method of handling and preparing food products is uncleanly and dangerous to health. Under existing law the National Government has no power to enforce inspection of the many forms of prepared meat food products that are daily going from the packing houses into interstate commerce. Owing to an inadequate appropriation the Department of Agriculture is not even able to place inspectors in all establishments desiring them. The present law prohibits the shipment of uninspected meat to foreign countries, but there is no provision forbidding the shipment of uninspected meats in interstate commerce, and thus the avenues of interstate commerce are left open to traffic in diseased or spoiled meats. If, as has been alleged on seemingly good authority, further evils exist, such as the improper use of chemicals and dyes, the Government lacks power to remedy them. A law is needed which will enable the inspectors of the General Government to inspect and supervise from the hoof to the can the preparation of the meat food product. The evil seems to be much less in the sale of dressed carcasses than in the sale of canned and other prepared products; and very much less as regards products sent abroad than as regards those used at home.

In my judgment the expense of the inspection should be paid by a fee levied on each animal slaughtered. If this is not done, the whole purpose of the law can at any time be defeated through an insufficient appropriation; and whenever there was no particular public interest in the subject it would be not only easy but natural thus to make the appropriation insufficient. If it were not for this consideration, I should favor the Government paying for the inspection.

The alarm expressed in certain quarters concerning this feature should be allayed by a realization of the fact that in no case, under such a law, will the cost of inspection exceed 8 cents per head.

I call special attention to the fact that this report is preliminary, and that the investigation is still unfinished. It is not yet possible to report on the alleged abuses in the use of deleterious chemical compounds in connection with canning and preserving meat products, nor on the alleged doctoring in this fashion of tainted meat and of products returned to the packers as having grown unsalable or unusable from age or from other reasons. Grave allegations are made in reference to abuses of this nature.

Let me repeat that under the present law there is practically no method of stopping these abuses if they should be discovered to exist. Legislation is needed in order to prevent the possibility of all abuses in the future. If no legislation is passed, then the excellent results accomplished by the work of this special committee will endure only so long as the memory of the committee's work is fresh, and a recrudescence of the abuses is absolutely certain.

I urge the immediate enactment into law of provisions which will enable the Department of Agriculture adequately to inspect the meat and meat food products entering into interstate commerce and to supervise the methods of preparing the same, and to prescribe the sanitary conditions under which the work shall be performed. I therefore commend to your favorable consideration and urge the enactment of substantially the provisions known as Senate amendment No. 29 to the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, as passed by the Senate, this amendment being commonly known as the "Beveridge amendment."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 4, 1906.

The PRESIDENT:

As directed by you, we investigated the conditions in the principal establishments in Chicago engaged in the slaughter of cattle, sheep, and hogs and in the preparation of dressed meat and meat food products. Two and a half weeks were spent in the investigation in Chicago, and during this time we went through the principal packing houses in the stock-yards district, together with a few of the smaller ones. A day was spent by Mr. Reynolds in New York City in the investigation of several of its leading slaughterhouses. During our investigation statements of conditions and practices in the packing houses, together with affidavits and documentary evidence, were offered us from numerous sources. Most of these were rejected as being far from proving the facts alleged and as being beyond the possibility of verification by us. We have made no statement as a fact in the report here presented that was not verified by our personal examination. Certain matters which we were unable to verify while in Chicago are still under investigation. The following is therefore submitted as a partial report touching upon those practices and conditions which we found most common and not confined to a single house or class of houses. A more detailed report would contain many specific instances of defects found in particular houses.

I.—Condition of the yards.

Before entering the buildings we noted the condition of the yards themselves as shown in the pavement, pens, viaducts, and platforms. The pavement is mostly of brick, the bricks laid with deep grooves between them, which inevitably fill with manure and refuse. Such pavement can not be properly cleaned and is slimy and malodorous when wet, yielding clouds of ill-smelling dust when dry. The pens are generally uncovered except those for sheep; these latter are paved and covered. The viaducts and platforms are of wood. Calves, sheep, and hogs that have died en route are thrown out upon the platforms where cars are unloaded. On a single platform on one occasion we counted fifteen dead hogs, on the next ten dead hogs. The only excuse given for delay in removal was that so often heard—the expense.

II.—Buildings.

Material.—The interior finish of most of the buildings is of wood; the partition walls, supports, and rafters are of wood, uncovered by plaster or cement. The flooring in some instances is of brick or cement, but usually of wood. In many of the rooms where water is used freely the floors are soaked and slimy.

Lighting.—The buildings have been constructed with little regard to either light or ventilation. The workrooms, as a rule, are very poorly lighted. A few rooms at the top of the buildings are well lighted because they can not escape the light, but most of the rooms are so dark as to make artificial light necessary at all times. Many inside rooms where food is prepared are without windows, deprived of sunlight, and without direct communication with the outside air. They may be best described as vaults in which the air rarely changes. Other rooms which open to the outer air are so large, the windows so clouded by dirt, and the walls and ceilings so dark and dingy that natural light only penetrates 20 or 30 feet from the windows, thus making artificial light in portions of even these outside rooms necessary. These dark and dingy rooms are naturally not kept suitably clean.

Ventilation.—Systematic ventilation of the workrooms is not found in any of the establishments we visited. In a few instances electric fans mitigate the stifling air, but usually the workers toil without relief in a humid atmosphere heavy with the odors of rotten wood, decayed meats, stinking offal, and entrails.

Equipment.—The work tables upon which the meat is handled, the floor carts on which it is carried about, and the tubs and other receptacles into which it is thrown are generally of wood. In all the places visited but a single porcelain-lined receptacle was seen. Tables covered with sheet iron, iron carts, and iron tubs are being introduced into the better establishments, but no establishment visited has as yet abandoned the extensive use of wooden tables and wooden receptacles. These wooden receptacles are frequently found water soaked, only half cleansed, and with meat scraps and grease accumulations adhering to their sides, and collecting dirt. This is largely true of meat racks and meat conveyors of every sort, which were in nearly all cases inadequately cleansed, and grease and meat scraps were found adhering to them, even after they had been washed and returned to service.

Sanitary conveniences.—Nothing shows more strikingly the general indifference to matters of cleanliness and sanitation that do the privies for both men and women. The prevailing type is made by cutting off a section of the workroom by a thin wooden partition rising to within a few feet of the ceiling. These privies usually ventilate into the workroom, though a few are found with a window opening into the outer air. Many are located in the inside corners of the workrooms, and thus have no outside opening whatever. They are furnished with a row of seats, generally without even side partitions. These rooms are sometimes used as cloakrooms by the employees. Lunch rooms constructed in the same manner, by boarding off a section of the workroom, often adjoin the privies, the odors of which add to the generally insanitary state of the atmosphere.

Abominable as the above-named conditions are, the one that affects most directly and seriously the cleanliness of the food products is the frequent absence of any lavatory provisions in the privies. Washing sinks are either not furnished at all or are small and dirty. Neither are towels, soap, or toilet paper provided. Men and women return directly from these places to plunge their unwashed hands into the meat to be converted into such food products as sausages, dried beef, and other compounds. Some of the privies are situated at a long distance from the workrooms, and men relieve themselves on the killing floors or in a corner of the workrooms. Hence, in some cases the fumes of the urine swell the sum of nauseating odors arising from the dirty, blood-soaked, rotting, wooden floors—fruitful culture beds for the disease germs of men and animals.

New buildings.—It is stated that many of the insanitary conditions are due to the fact that these buildings are old and have been built by piecemeal, and that in the newer buildings, being erected from time to time, the defects of the earlier structures are being remedied. This contention is not borne out by the facts. One of the large plants erected within recent years has most of the defects of the older buildings. It is true that three large model buildings have been erected, but one is an office building, while the other two contain only cooling, storage, and sales rooms. No model building for the preparation of food products has been built in the stock yards of Chicago.

III.—A model slaughterhouse in contrast with those of Chicago.

In impressive contrast to the conditions that we saw in the stock yards of Chicago is an establishment that Mr. Reynolds visited in New York City. It well merits a description in those particulars in which it is vastly superior to similar concerns in Chicago. The two upper floors used for cattle pens are paved with well-laid bricks and cement, with side walls of brick, the top floor being covered to protect the cattle from the weather. The killing floor is paved with bluestone, sloping toward well-arranged drains, and has a large air shaft for special ventilation, and abundant windows. The ceiling and upper side walls are of hard cement, with steel crossbeams and cement-faced steel supports. The lower side walls are covered with white porcelain brick. When the slaughtering of each day is finished, water is turned on, and in not more than fifteen minutes the room is so thoroughly cleansed that all perceptible odors and traces of the work are removed.

Other rooms, such as those for cooling and storage, are of similar construction to the killing floor. White porcelain-lined bricks and curved tiles join floors and side walls, that no corners may retain dirt and refuse. Ventilation is everywhere excellent and light abundant, both these matters having evidently received careful consideration in planning the building. The privies contain separate sections with self-flushing bowls, white porcelain-lined wash basins, shower baths, and mirrors. Towels and toilet paper are provided, and everything is kept clean. The effect of all these excellencies of construction and arrangement is evident in promoting the care of the products and in elevating the morals of the workers.

The same principles of sanitation and the same care of the health and cleanliness of the workers would revolutionize the stock yards of Chicago, and the attainment of such a standard should be the concern of the National Government and of the city of Chicago.

Under existing conditions the burden of protecting the cleanliness and wholesomeness of the products and the health of the workers and of improving the conditions under which the work is performed, must fall upon the National Government.

IV.—Treatment of meats and prepared food products.

Uncleanliness in handling products.—An absence of cleanliness was also found everywhere in the handling of meat being prepared for the various meat-food products. After killing, carcasses are well washed, and up to the time they reach the cooling room are handled in a fairly sanitary and cleanly manner. The parts that leave the cooling room for treatment in bulk are also handled with regard to cleanliness, but the parts that are sent from the cooling room to those departments of the packing houses in which various forms of meat products are prepared are handled with no regard whatever for cleanliness. In some of the largest establishments sides that are sent to what is known as the "boning room" are thrown in a heap upon the floor. The workers climb over these heaps of meat, select the pieces they wish, and frequently throw them down upon the dirty floor beside their working bench. Even in cutting the meat upon the bench, the work is usually held pressed against their aprons, and these aprons were, as a rule, indescribably filthy. They were made is most cases of leather or of rough sacking and bore long accumulated grease and dirt. In only a few places were suitable oilcloth aprons worn. Moreover, men were seen to climb from the floor and stand, with shoes dirty with the refuse of the floors, on the tables upon which the meat was handled. They were seen at the lunch hour sitting on the tables on the spot on which the meat product was handled, and all this under the very eye of the superintendent of the room, showing that this was the common practice.

Meat scraps were also found being shoveled into receptacles from dirty floors, where they were left to lie until again shoveled into barrels or into machines for chopping. These floors, it must be noted, were in most cases damp and soggy, in dark, ill-ventilated rooms, and the employees in utter ignorance of cleanliness or danger to health expectorated at will upon them. In a word, we saw meat shoveled from filthy wooden floors, piled on tables rarely washed, pushed from room to room in rotten box carts, in all of which processes it was in the way of gathering dirt, splinters, floor filth, and the expectoration of tuberculous and other diseased workers. Where comment was made to floor superintendents about these matters, it was always the reply that this meat would afterwards be cooked, and that this sterilization would prevent any danger from its use. Even this, it may be pointed out in passing, is not wholly true. A very considerable portion of the meat so handled is sent out as smoked products and in the form of sausages, which are prepared to be eaten without being cooked.

A particularly glaring instance of uncleanliness was found in a room where the best grade of sausage was being prepared for export. It was made from carefully selected meats, and was being prepared to be eaten uncooked. In this case the employee carted the chopped-up meat across a room in a barrow, the handles of which were filthy with grease. The meat was then thrown out upon tables, and the employee climbed upon the table, handled the meat with his unwashed hands, knelt with his dirty apron and trousers in contact with the meat he was spreading out, and, after he had finished his operation, again took hold of the dirty handles of the wheelbarrow, went back for another load, and repeated this process indefinitely. Inquiry developed the fact that there was no water in this room at all, and the only method the man adopted for cleaning his hands was to rub them against his dirty apron or on his still filthier trousers.

As an extreme example of the entire disregard on the part of employees of any notion of cleanliness in handling dressed meat, we saw a hog that had just been killed, cleaned, washed, and started on its way to the cooling room fall from the sliding rail to a dirty wooden floor and slide part way into a filthy men's privy. It was picked up by two employees, placed upon a truck, carried into the cooling room and hung up with other carcasses, no effort being made to clean it.

Treatment of meat after inspection.—The radical defect in the present system of inspection is that it does not go far enough. It is confined at present by law to passing on the healthfulness of animals at the time of killing; but the meat that is used in sausage and in the various forms of canned products and other prepared meat foods goes through many processes, in all of which there is possibility of contamination through insanitary handling, and further danger through the use of chemicals. During all these processes of preparation there is no Government inspection and no assurance whatever that these meat-food products are wholesome and fit for food—despite the fact that all these products, when sent out, bear a label stating they have been passed upon by Government inspectors.

As to the investigation of the alleged use of dyes, preservatives, or chemicals in the preparation of cured meats, sausages, and canned goods we are not yet prepared to report. We did look into the matter of sanitary handling of the meats being prepared for the various food products. The results of our observations have already been partly given. Other instances of how products may be made up, and still secure the stamp of Government inspection are here given. In one well-known establishment we came upon fresh meat being shoveled into barrels, and a regular proportion being added of stale scraps that had lain on a dirty floor in the corner of a room for some days previous. In another establishment, equally well known, a long table was noted covered with several hundred pounds of cooked scraps of beef and other meats. Some of these meat scraps were dry, leathery, and unfit to be eaten; and in the heap were found pieces of pigskin, and even some bits of robe strands and other rubbish. Inquiry evoked the frank admission from the man in charge that this was to be ground up and used in making "potted ham."

All of these canned products bear labels, of which the following is a sample:

ABATTOIR No. —.
The contents of this package have been inspected according to the act of Congress of March 3, 1891.

QUALITY GUARANTEED.

The phraseology of these labels is wholly unwarranted. The Government inspectors pass only upon the healthfulness of the animal at the time of killing. They know nothing of the processes through which the meat has passed since this inspection. They do not know what else may have been placed in the cans in addition to "inspected meat." As a matter of fact, they know nothing about the "contents" of the can upon which the packers place these labels—do not even know that it contains what it purports to contain. The legend "Quality guaranteed" immediately following the statement as to Government inspection is wholly unjustifiable. It deceives and is plainly designed to deceive the average purchaser, who naturally infers from the label that the Government guarantees the contents of the can to be what it purports to be.

In another establishment piles of sausages and dry moldy canned meats, admittedly several years old, were found, which the superintendent stated to us would be tanked and converted into grease. The disposition to be made of this was wholly optional with the superintendents or representatives of the packers, as the Government does not concern itself with the disposition of meats after they have passed inspection on the killing floor. It might all be treated with chemicals, mixed with other meats, turned out in any form of meat product desired, and yet the packages or receptacles in which it was to be shipped out to the public would be marked with a label that their contents had been "Government inspected." It is not alleged here that such was to be made of this stuff. The case is pointed out as one showing the glaring opportunity for the misuse of a label bearing the name and the implied guaranty of the United States Government.

Another instance of abuse in the use of the labels came to our notice. In two different establishments great stocks of old canned goods were being put through a washing process to remove the old labels. They were then subjected to sufficient heat to "liven up" the contents—to use the phrase of the room superintendent. After this, fresh labels, with the Government name on them, were to be placed upon the cans, and they were to be sent out bearing all the evidence of being a freshly put up product. In one of these instances, by the admission of the superintendent, the stock thus being relabeled was over two years old. In the other case the superintendent evaded a statement of how old the goods were.

V.—Treatment of employees.

The lack of consideration for the health and comfort of the laborers in the Chicago stock yards seems to be a direct consequence of the system of administration that prevails. The various departments are under the direct control of superintendents who claim to use full authority in dealing with the employees and who seem to ignore all considerations except those of the account book. Under this system proper care of the products and of the health and comfort of the employees is impossible, and the consumer suffers in consequence. The insanitary conditions in which the laborers work and the feverish pace which they are forced to maintain inevitably affect their health. Physicians state that tuberculosis is disproportionately prevalent in the stock yards, and the victims of this disease expectorate on the spongy wooden floors of the dark workrooms, from which falling scraps of meat are later shoveled up to be converted into food products.

Even the ordinary decencies of life are completely ignored. In practically all cases the doors of the toilet rooms open directly into the working rooms, the privies of men and women frequently adjoin, and the entrances are sometimes no more than a foot or two apart. In other cases there are no privies for women in the rooms in which they work, and to reach the nearest it is necessary to go up or down a couple of flights of stairs. In one noticeable instance the privy for the women working in several adjoining rooms was in a room in which men chiefly were employed, and every girl going to use this had to pass by the working places of dozens of male operatives and enter the privy, the door of which was not 6 feet from the working place of one of the men operatives. As previously noted, in the privies for men and women alike there are no partitions, but simply a long row of open seats. Rest rooms, where tired women workers might go for a short rest, were found as rare exceptions, and in some establishments women are even placed in charge of privies chiefly for the purpose, it was stated, to see that the girls did not absent themselves too long from their work under the excuse of visiting them. In some instances what was called a rest room was simply one end of the privy partitioned off by a 6-foot partition from the remaining inclosure. A few girls were found using this, not only as a rest room, but as the only available place in which to sit to eat their luncheon.

Much of the work in connection with the handling of meat has to be carried on in rooms of a low temperature, but even here a callous disregard was everywhere seen for the comfort of those who work in these rooms. Girls and women were found in rooms registering a temperature of 38° F. without any ventilation whatever, depending entirely upon artificial light. The floors were wet and soggy, and in some cases covered with water, so that the girls had to stand in boxes of sawdust as a protection for their feet. In a few cases even drippings from the refrigerator rooms above trickled through the ceiling upon the heads of the workers and upon the food products being prepared. A very slight expense would have furnished drier floors and protected them against the tricklings from the ceiling. It was asserted by the superintendent of these rooms that this low temperature was essential to the proper keeping of the meat; but precisely similar work was found in other establishments carried on in rooms kept at a fair temperature. In many cases girls of 16, 17, and 18 years stand ten hours a day at work, much of which could be carried on while sitting down.

In several establishments well-managed restaurants were provided for the clerical force, and in one instance a smoking room was provided for them; but no provision was found anywhere for a place to eat for the male laborers. In pleasant weather they eat their luncheon sitting outdoors along the edge of the sidewalk, or any place where they can find standing room. In winter, however, and in inclement weather, their lunches have to be eaten in rooms that in many cases are stifling and nauseating. Eating rooms are provided in a number of places for women workers in the various departments; and in most of the large establishments coffee is served them at a penny a cup. Beyond this meager consideration for their convenience at meal times, scarcely any evidence is found that anyone gave a thought to their comfort.

The neglect on the part of their employers to recognize or provide for the requirements of cleanliness and decency of the employees must have an influence that can not be exaggerated in lowering the morals and discouraging cleanliness on the part of the workers employed in the packing houses. The whole situation as we saw it in these huge establishments tends necessarily and inevitably to the moral degredation of thousands of workers, who are forced to spend their working hours under conditions that are entirely unnecessary and unpardonable, and which are a constant menace not only to their own health, but to the health of those who use the food products prepared by them.

VI.—Government inspection.

We observed carefully the inspection before slaughter, the inspection after slaughter on the killing beds, the more minute examination of animals tagged on the killing floors, and the microscopic examination for trichinosis.

Inspection before slaughter.—Inspection before slaughter appears to have little value in most cases. That undue advantage of this inspection is taken by outside parties is charged, and opportunities for such are abundant, but no specific evidence was presented to us. That this unimportant and superficial examination should be compulsory under the present law, whereas the more scientific examination after slaughter is only permissive, indicates a serious defect in the law.

Inspection after slaughter.—Inspection after slaughter appears to be carefully and conscientiously made. The Government veterinarians maintain that it is adequate, insisting that a passing examination of certain glands, of the viscera, and of the general condition of the carcass is sufficient to enable an expert, engaged constantly on this work, to detect at once the presence of disease, or of abnormal conditions. On the slightest indication of disease or abnormal conditions the carcass is tagged and set aside for a later and more careful examination. There should, however, be more precautions taken to insure that the instruments used be kept antiseptically clean.

Microscopic examination.—The microscopic examination of hogs to be exported to Germany appears to be made with great care, and it may fairly be asked why the same inspection is not made of hogs killed for the American market. The statement that ham, pork, and sausage, that are frequently eaten raw in Germany, are not so used in America, is not strictly true. Large numbers of our foreign-born population eat ham and pork comparatively raw, and hence need this protection; and further, much of this pork goes into sausage to be eaten without being cooked.

Number of inspectors.—The present number of inspectors is certainly inadequate, as the Secretary of Agriculture has often complained. We noted that some large establishments had an obviously insufficient force. A few small concerns have no inspectors at all, and may sell uninspected meat wherever they please in the United States.

VII.—Legislation.

1. Examination before slaughter is of minor importance and should be permissive instead of mandatory. Examination after slaughter is of supreme importance and should be compulsory.

2. Goats, now exempt from inspection, intended for foreign or interstate commerce, should be included in the list subject to the inspection of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and should be equally controlled by the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture.

3. The examination of all meat products intended for interstate commerce at any stage of their care or treatment should be consigned to the Bureau of Animal Industry, and no mark or sign declaring that inspection has been made by Government officials should be allowed on any can, box, or other receptacle or parcel containing food products unless the same has been subject to Government inspection at any and every stage of the process of preparation, and all such labels should contain the date of issuance, and it should be a misdemeanor to erase, alter, or destroy any such labels. Meat products and canned, preserved, or pickled meats, when sent from any packing or canning establishment, if returned to the same, should be subject to such further inspection, regulation, and isolation from other meat products as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

4. Power should be given to the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations regarding the sanitation and construction of all buildings used or intended to be used for the care of food products for interstate or foreign trade, and to make such regulation as he may deem necessary to otherwise protect the cleanliness and wholesomeness of animal products prepared and sold for foreign and interstate commerce.

5. It should be forbidden to any person, firm, or corporation to transport or offer for transportation from one State to another any meat or meat food products not inspected and labeled.

General suggestions.—1. The number of inspectors should be largely increased, so that special assignments may be made for night inspection, for the examination of animals at the platforms of stock yards, for the following of dead animals to their alleged destination, and for other special work.

2. Special Government inspection should be carried on continuously to prevent violations of the law and general abuses in the trade, and to secure evidence when necessary.

3. A careful study of the standards of inspection in other countries should be made, and the results of the study should be published and circulated for the public information.

4. Consideration should be given to the question of specific labeling of all carcasses sold as fresh meat, which, upon examination after slaughter, show signs of disease, but are still deemed suitable for food.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, the time has at last arrived to do justice to brave old Jack Barry and to ourselves.

The true history of the world is told in the lives of the great men who have lived and struggled, worked and wrought, and suffered in it.

Men whom we revere for what they did and love for what they felt.

The real nobility of a people dwells not so much in numbers as it does in the emulating memory of the hero.

Exultant destiny is heroism made known to every son of hope.

Heroism taught by the printed page that childhood spells in the morning flush of the heart's best day.

A heroism that looks down from the cherished picture on the wall of garret and cottage and mansion in daily inspiration of truth and honor.

The heroism of the memoir enshrined as man's best friend on the open shelves of honest thought.

And then, again, heroism born and bred in the sculptured bust that fills a consecrated niche of high resolve.

And the statue in the park—it issues from the shades of sleep to become at once a resurrected ideal of subtile art and touching valor.

No power of earth can stay the hand of time; but with the statue the man himself walks out upon us through the parting veil of the changeless past; to people, the brain of now with visions of the virtues that have been.

The busy multitude may not go over with him, the long journey.

But they will, though it be unwittingly, stumble across his path.

They will, this day and another, look up into his face, and, without knowing it perhaps, carry away with them the indefinable something that makes men good and true and brave.

He was a steel engraving; but at last he is a personal friend and neighbor.

He was dead before, embalmed and buried between the leaves of a forgotten book; but now they know him—his form and figure has made him real—his countenance reveals the consummate glory of an age gone by and which has come back to us, the mute fingers strike the stringless lyre of the dead years in silent strains of tender thought, to be carried home in lingering memory, there to dwell through all the nights of doubt and fear and failure, despair and death; through all the happy morns of joy and love and hope and glad success.

And such is life—we feel our way into the future over the trodden paths of yesterday.

A babe is born, he plays awhile to laugh and cry; a flower is planted in his heart, and from the rooftree of a vine-clad home there comes the wondrous melody of love's sweet song.

A star appears to lead him on to deeds and glorious day; and then a shadow falls, as fall it must to each and all—the world is touched with a sentiment, a tear, and a new idea.

The book, a picture, the statue, and the star still shine. For the heart it will live on forever, though the song, the tree, and the flower have long since died.

Now, in the days when America's fair fame encompasses the earth, and her fleet's the pride of the ocean, let us not forget the story of the fathers, stately and stainless, who have builded the glory and honor, the dignity and immortality of the Republic.

One distinguished character may cover a whole peoples' brow with unfading laurel; one great name may fill an age with Every generation breeds in its own mysterious way a dreamer of ideals, or perhaps a breaker of images, or it may be a pioneer of thought blazing a trail.

And then by chance it may evolve a mighty captain to raise a new flag in the glad sky.

And so it happened that about one hundred and sixty-one years ago John Barry was born.

He first opened his wondering eyes in an humble cottage thatched with straw, beneath the spreading branches of an immemorial rooftree.

I can see it now, unfolding a quiet and peaceful scene of pastoral beauty, a dreamy lake, the still wide waters of the bay, the undulating fields that spread about, an emerald sward melting far away into the violet hills and the depths of blue.

And in the center of it all the tree and the little home, filled with love and kindness, where all the day was work, and when the dusk came down to mingle with the light, the man, but not the master, by the side of a loving wife, listening to the song of childhood's laughter, watched the sun go out of the dying day.

And this was where John Barry was born, in the county of Wexford, Ireland.

No stars fell on that night to mark the unheeded event.

No courier of fashion heralded his birth to the neighborhood.

He was simply a child of common fortune, born to a modest, God-fearing, honest tiller of the soil, in the midst of the idyls and tragedies of Ireland, the brightest, strangest, and saddest of all time.

It did not occur to anyone just then that all the proudest progeny of the world have stooped to kiss the brow of mother earth and gather manly strength.

That, like the soil, whole families may lie fallow for ages to incubate, and then burst forth in the resplendent flower of genius.

The chemists of the earth, the searchers of the mind, have not yet fathomed the secret and cunning essence of the magnificent thing we call the human heart.

Nature always conceals the detail, but everywhere unveils the monumental fact.

So far as it is known, no blood of royal blue coursed the veins of John Barry; it was all red, and, to his credit, it never changed its color down to his dying day.

And yet he so lived and labored in unfailing faith and unfaltering courage that when the last hour shall come, when the long roll is called, Ireland, redeemed and free, will stand up in imperial grace with a greater pride than did the old Roman, and say, "I thank God that I am the mother of John Barry;" and there by her side will be America, clothed with laurel and liberty crowned, with her outstretched hands of kindly jealousy, to proclaim in the pathos of rival tones, "Commodore John Barry belongs to us."

And in the glory that encircles the name of that splendid captain the Red, White, and Blue and the green and gold are entwined together in a common sympathy that shall linger beyond all the graves and through the shades and into the dawn.

How did it all happen?

What strange and shadowy power, what mystic, incomprehensible tide cast up this child of circumstance from an unknown sea to uplift humanity?

Here we are with nothing to say.

We come without consent and leave under protest.

We live in a narrow vale.

The dawn is a dream and the evening dusky hope.

But I do not believe in the utter fickleness of fate. I believe that in the boundless sweep of matter each man and woman and child is a cog in the great wheel of revolving destiny.

I believe that every act and deed, thought and word is an evolution, and that every condition and sentiment of life is formed and fashioned out of something that has gone before.

And so it comes to each of us as it did to John Barry. We are here through the intelligent will of the Creator. We are here a cog designed to fill a niche.

Shall we fill it well or ill? That's the question.

Shall we advance the measured harmony of the onward move by our birth, or shall we, by delaying sloth, create an ignominious discord in the universe?

Some men solve that mystery gloriously.

An unseen and inexplainable something incites the soul to perform a precursored mission, and we have the discovery of the Western Hemisphere by Columbus or the creation of an ideal freedom there by John Barry and his fellows.

The boy is the father of the man—that is plain to all—but at the same time every man is the child of his environment.

One day, in the afternoon of his life, a distinguished warrior went back to the old times again.

And while there watching the schoolboys in their playground sports, at the same old place where he had years ago fought and failed and sometimes came out victor, the Duke of Wellington turned to his friend and said:

It was there the battle of Waterloo was won.

Waterloo, the synonym of colossal egoism and of its ultimate downfall everywhere.

Its soothing syllables hardly die upon the lip when the name of Napoleon comes without calling.

I see him now on the Isle of St. Helena, statuesque and remorseless, with folded arms and relentless face, unmoved by any thought of all the red carnage of conflict, the maimed and the dead, the guns that lay broken with the heart of the mother, the swords that were rust in the tears of the orphan, the graves that were dug, and the hopes that were buried, all for his glory.

And then my thoughts go back to the year 1784, when, at the age of 15, Bonaparte climbed the weary steps to the mean quarters of his attic chamber in the military school of Paris.

The first thing that met his view, bescrawled in charcoal on the whitewashed wall, was the character of his predecessors in three signed inscriptions. They were:

An epaulet is very long to win.
The finest day in life is that of battle.
Life is but a prolonged lie.

Napoleon read them and then added a fourth sentence, the last of the chapter:

The end of all is 6 feet of earth.

And it was there the battle of Waterloo was lost.

Just one more bit of life to round the thought.

There once lived a poor boy reared in a land big in men and large in brain. A land where liberty was the birthright and tyranny the legacy; where the Government forsook its traditions and statesmen forgot their manhood.

Where the ruthless hand of man purloined the pen of Magna Charta to write desolation, ruin, and misery in the statute books of a great, strong, brilliant race, a whole race of big-hearted, bright-minded, affectionate people.

Where the powers of might wrung from unwilling submission an enforced tribute and then beggared the subject, starved the body, impoverished the intellect by coerced ignorance, and with infinite cruelty filled with tears the myriad eyes that should have been as blue and bright as the sunlit skies of Innisfail.

The lonely wanderer inherited no rich bequest of learning from governmental bounty.

Nor could he in after years go back to the playground of a school day filled with prophetic memory.

He was educated by want and self-reliance; by flower and field; by cloud and star; by all the wrongs and woes of his tortured land; by the sorrows that bleed and the agonies that sear; by the wind-swept wave, and the ebb and flow of the untired sea, ever sounding in the human heart that eternal longing for the freedom of its unmeasured reach—the endless music of the Infinite's sublimest anthem of the free.

This was his university, except that over his cradle, gilded by no canopy of pretense, there hung the sweet face of her who never sleeps when childhood needs her care. And as he grew, her loving arms about his neck, murmuring soft and low with mother's lips an inspired song that old ocean in his grandest mood could ne'er express.

And this was the cradle in which American liberty was rocked, the academy of its growth, and the playground of its victories.

Yes; man is the offspring of his surroundings.

Deprived of fundamental sustenance he hungers for it with all the consuming passion of starving life.

Liberty is the constitutional gift of the Almighty everywhere.

Without it all the wasting days are but the solemn echo of sad memories, freighted with the wrecks of human hope and the thoughts of joy that might have been.

John Barry belonged to a race of unrequited destiny, who love liberty stronger than life, and whose sons and daughters rather than wear the servile badge are scattered far and near in every land and on all the seas.

At about the age of 15 Barry turned his face toward the dawn and said good-by to home and friends, to Erin, the green banner, and the golden harp.

Forever after his home was the sea and America his country.

Through all the troubled spirit of the times, through all the gigantic struggles of an almost hopeless contest, he fought by the side of Washington with more than mortal valor—battling with him to light a torch below and set a new star in the firmament above.

In the fierce fires of seven ensanguined years of heroism, unsurpassed and rarely equaled, they did kindle a spark that gave to man about the only thing worth living for—his full and unrestricted conscience, tolerance of equality, fraternity of thought, the enfranchisement of reason, and a Republic which places him above the government—a Republic whose chiefest honor lies in the happiness of the average citizen, where worth is aristocracy and work the final test of rank.

They did rear a torch which threw a shadow around the throne, lighted a rainbow in every tear, and illumined all mankind in the sovereignty of justice, the sanctity of labor, the matchless possibilities of human endeavor; and the flag that floats a benediction over every stalwart son that stands beneath its folds.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I am talking to you with grateful word for a good man gone.

Five score years and more have passed since the majestic stream of Commodore Barry's life hurried away in the sunlight, in the moonlight, beneath the storm and beneath the sky, to join the azure sea he loved so well.

For the ocean is always calling, and the rivers are ever flowing over the golden bar and into the twilight tide.

The country of his lifelong devotion is his grave; his deeds are an ample monument, and he needs no other; but we do in justice to ourselves.

We owe England a debt of gratitude for the men she banished.

Oppression always exiles the best.

And it came about that Great Britain in those days impoverished her proudest citizenship to enrich the wilderness.

She drove from their hearthstones the men who dared to think and who believed they had a right to tell their thoughts; the men who had the courage to act, and a pride that refused to bend the suppliant knee save in the presence of their Maker.

When you read the epic drama of things human in the celebrated history of the nations dead and gone you will find all such regal souls had vanished like a dream just before decay set in.

If the Republic shall ever become a tradition of fading memory, like Carthage, Greece, and Rome, it will be because we have forgotten—forgotten the honest, rugged character of the "noblest men that ever lived in the tide of times."

Now and then a being comes down to us possessed of a clairvoyant something, whose unfettered spirit leaps all the barriers that fortress and confine the mind, to capture knowledge on every field of exploit.

And for want of a better name we call it "genius."

It follows no rule. It obeys no law.

A brilliant, occult, unfixed star that flashes across the dark places and conjures up intelligence out of chaos.

But nature never used a meteor to make a world or found a state.

And it made its real statesmen out of a full rounded character, too well poised to be called brilliant, too slow to excite the imagination, too steadfast to ever jar the mind in wonder, too patient and commonplace, too human and universal, to touch the singing chords of romance and turn a single unusual act into a battle hymn or national anthem.

No; the stars will continue to glorify the shades, the queen of night will forever shed its reflected rays, but the unrivaled sun drowns all the splendor of contrasts with its undeviating glow, that fills the breadths and depths of every horizon.

And such is the genius of men like Washington and Barry, too broad and elemental, too plainly useful in perfected symmetry to startle the senses. They were the state builders, the creators of an epoch. Their every thought breathed undying devotion, their every act spoke, "duty, stern daughter of the voice of God."

We know a man by the friends he makes.

Great men have friends who are good.

Washington refused to meet Talleyrand and shake his hand, first, because he was a refugee from France, and Washington was President of the United States; but that was not all; second, because Washington was an honest, sincere man, who hated the treachery of craft, who despised the perfidy of intrigue, and all honors bought with the loss of self-respect—they never met.

We love Washington and call him father.

He was the admiring friend of Commodore Barry.

Washington was his friend, and he admired him because John Barry was pure in heart and live oak to the core; because he was the truest, manliest type of a Christian soldier, as spotless in private honor as he was great in the discharge of his duty; because he was a man of sleepless energy, who was brave and cool whenever and wherever danger summoned; a dauntless warrior, whose kindly nature tempered a firmness that never knew defeat.

And so it was when the crucial time arrived, when Great Britain had marshaled her veteran armies, her unconquered navies, to wring an unjust tribute from her protesting colonies, and when all but men of oak and iron, who were willing to say, "give me liberty or give me death," would have called resistance unutterable folly, it became the last and only hope of success to have officers with sound judgment and consummate skill, whose experience and valor, whose courage and loyalty, were beyond all doubt.

In the quest of this responsibility Congress, through Washington, discovered in John Barry the rare possessor of all these qualities and enlisted his lifelong services in one of the first naval commissions.

The supremest test of generalship is the ability to know and have faith in men.

Lincoln found Grant, and no poisoned shaft of envy, no barbed arrow of slander, could drive him from his side. Both are now dead, but the Union survives and their names are written in the stars.

Hood and Wellington had the brain to believe in Lord Nelson.

His battle of the Nile drove Napoleon out of Egypt, a dreary failure. His dying victory at Trafalgar swept France from the ocean. After that came Waterloo, and England was mistress of the seas, the autocrat of nations.

And so Washington had the genius to know Barry.

He first met and marked him with discerning favor at the home of Meredith, in Philadelphia.

Barry was at that time the captain of the Black Prince, at the age of 25, and Meredith was the owner.

When revolution was decided upon Washington fully realized the stupendous character of the undertaking, an enterprise which was destined to test not only the highest powers of military genius, but a superb moral courage which must needs bulwark the almost insurmountable difficulties that threatened many times to deprive martial prowess of its fairest opportunities.

And early in the Titanic struggle Washington recognized that ultimate victory rode upon the ships that ruled the sea and dwelt in the heroic breasts of the men who commanded them.

The price of supremacy in the naval warfare of that unequal conflict meant that indomitable pluck, quick perception, and splendid patriotism must take the place of mere brute strength and animal courage; and this was what he thought upon the subject, as told in a letter sent to Lafayette:

> In any operation and under all circumstances a decisive naval superiority is to be considered as a fundamental principle and the basis upon which every hope of success must ultimately depend.

Naturally in the extreme necessities of a time that "tried men's souls" and which meant liberty or death, when he needed a man to tie to and to win with, his mind immediately went back to that brave Irish boy captain he had met at Meredith's, and to whom he had given his faith in mental silence those years before.

He made him captain of the Lexington, which was the first boat actually put to sea for liberty, under authority of the Continental Congress in the forepart of 1776.

Captain Barry accepted the commission with patriotic gladness, and from that time forward until death claimed him he fought for the cause of the oppressed colonies and took a distinguished part in all the unspeakable vicissitudes of his adopted country.

To use his own language, he gave up "the finest ship and the first employ in America and entered the service of his country."

He never abandoned that service until, wrapped in the flag, he went to a reward that knows no sound of strife and means immortal honor.

His fame does not rest on a single splendid day of crowning glory, but on long and weary years of self-forgetting sacrifice.

His honor does not lie alone in the glare of brilliant and startling achievements, but on a whole life of toil, of heroic act, and sometimes of martyrdom.

And no American patriot ever breathed a more devoted prayer of inextinguishable loyalty for his country than animated the breast of Commodore John Barry.

At one time when the metropolis had fallen into the possession of the British, when the enemy had triumphed and the best friends of America began to despair beyond expression, General Howe, believing Barry to be the most important naval factor against the successful progress and issue of the English arms, authorized an offer to the commodore of what amounted to $100,000, and the command of the best frigate in the British fleet.

Barry spurned the outrageous insult with all the indignation of injured patriotism and assaulted virtue.

This was his immortal answer to the insolent Britain:

I have devoted myself to the cause of my country, and not the value and command of the whole British fleet could seduce me from it.

Yes, Washington was Barry's friend and admirer. Barry had more than equaled his fondest expectations and unmeasured confidence.

On the occasion of one of his greatest and most signal triumphs, which has been characterized by an eminent naval expert as an achievement that for boldness of design and dexterity of execution was not surpassed, if equaled at all, during the war, Washington with evident pride and certain friendship, wrote these memorable sentiments:

I congratulate you on the success which has crowned your gallantry * * * in the late attack upon the enemy's ships. Although circumstances have prevented you from reaping the full benefit of your conquests, yet there is ample consolation in the degree of glory which you have acquired. With my wishes that a suitable recompense may always attend your bravery.

And from that day to this the world has not given the Christian, sincere, brave, honest, modest Jack Barry the "full benefits of his conquests" in the founding of the only true Republic that ever existed nor the "suitable recompense" that has belonged to him all these years.

But the gods are just, and time is the instrument of Providence that solves all problems and decrees all justice.

Judged by his unrivaled services and the eminent creative qualities of his long and patriotic career, Commodore Barry was the real father of the American Navy we have to-day.

True, the annals are full of glorious deeds that must have inspired the final outcome beyond all question.

Yes; there were giants in those days. They were all fathers, and they have bequeathed us the richest legacy of all the dead—of all the dead that have just begun to live and whose memory will never die.

Every one a son of freedom and the defender of human rights.

But every great idea, every distinguished event, has had a first and original fountain head, from which has flowed the ever-widening stream that sparkles in the lives of men.

It may be that John Adams should be given the honor, if fatherhood is to be bestowed upon anyone.

He was the man of all others in Congress who best comprehended what seamen could do in defeating their enemies.

He was the one man most potent of everybody who pushed through the act establishing the Navy of the Revolution, whose intrepid doing had so much to do with the fate of the colonies.

If it be John Adams, then, I say, it would be worse than dishonor to deprive him of it.

Under that act, inspired by John Adams, Barry was commissioned captain of the Lexington.

He was the first to put to sea; the first to fly the colonial colors by its orders.

And within a few short weeks, amidst a superior and hostile force, in a wide and dangerous field, he defeated the enemy after a spirited contest, and captured the first prize of any vessel of war by a regular American cruiser in battle.

But no one would venture this as a reason, taken alone, to assert that he was the fountain head of our Navy.

But with a spirit that could not be subdued and an energy that refused to be rested he was again in the thick of the fight, and again had engaged the foe with such valorous onslaught as to win the praises of his commander in chief in those memorable words of Washington.

He was then given command of the Effingham, one of the largest men-of-war built at Philadelphia under the act fostered by John Adams.

While in this ship Barry made a most notable capture, filled with daring courage and consummate strategy.

To illustrate his splendid courage and valiant disposition, when he received orders to destroy the Effingham to prevent her falling into the hands of the enemy he at first refused with characteristic sailor bluntness, saying he could defeat them, he was there to fight, and not to sink his gallant ship.

Then he fought with Washington on land in the Jerseys till he was ordered to the command of the Raleigh.

So zealous was he in the cause of his country that rather than lie idle when fighting was to be done he volunteered and served as aid-de-camp in Jersey till another ship was furnished him.

Later he was placed in command of the Alliance, considered the stateliest ship of the American Revolutionary Navy, in which he fought with many victories and renowned valor.

It was upon the Alliance that the last action of the Revolution took place, which was described at the time as a most brilliant exploit, unsurpassed in the war.

In this action Barry was seriously wounded, and while below they reported to him that his colors were about to be struck. No, said he, "if the ship can not be fought without, I'll be carried to the deck." When his sailors knew he was to be with them, they fought with redoubled fury. Their battle cry "We'll stick by Jack."

Within an incredibly short time the enemy had struck, and Captain Barry was a victor's victor.

His individual spirit had put a flag of triumph over defeat.

It was here the splendid magnanimity of his heroic manhood was most conspicuously displayed. When Captain Edwards was conducted to the cabin of the commodore he presented his sword to Barry, who immediately returned it as a testimonial of what is in the heart of one brave man for another.

Commodore Barry observed at the time "that Captain Edwards richly merited it, and that his King ought to give him a better ship." But the King had no hopes of other ships in that contest; this was the closing glorious naval fight of seven long years of glorious warfare—fraught with the world's largest hope. And Barry was there at the close.

In a fight he made in the Mediterranean, Captain Vaughan, commander of the British frigate, with the frankness of a generous foe, confessed that he had never seen a ship so ably fought as the Alliance.

Barry served all through the Revolution.

His career began with the infancy of the Navy and ended in its full reorganization.

With the Lexington he made the first fight, and with the Alliance the last.

His name shines on all the pages of Revolutionary history, filling them with his brilliant services and remarkable victories.

Still, this may not be enough to call him father.

Cooper has pathetically related the end of it all. "It remains only to say that the Navy of the Revolution, like its Army, was disbanded at the termination of the struggle, literally leaving nothing behind it but the recollections of its services and sufferings."

But Barry did not go.

He was an Irish patriot; in his book of faith there was no such word as disband. After the termination of hostilities the country needed him above all others, and he still remained in public service.

Washington was President and the friend and admirer of John Barry, who was, of all the naval captains that remained, the one who possessed the greatest reputation for experience, conduct, and skill.

And Washington knew this.

He with Adams also knew that we must have immediately a strong and dominant Navy. That it must be a Navy of the highest standard of warships in the world at that time, combining everything that was new upon the subject and everything of novel force and effect that could be devised from the young and buoyant brain of the new Republic. The first thing Washington did in the consummation of these plans was to give a commission of what amounted to commodore, or commander in chief of all the American navies, to John Barry.

And under him Congress authorized the immediate building of the infant Navy.

He was authorized and instructed to supervise and reorganize a more powerful armament.

Six ships were provided for.

Mr. Humphreys, of Philadelphia, and Barry, with whatever advice they could get from all sources, finally settled on the models.

The new Navy was constructed on these plans and under John Barry's watchful guidance and supervision.

It contained, when built, the best warships of the world.

They were the model battle ships of that time, and Humphreys, the shipbuilder, and Barry, the commodore, the master minds.

This new Navy was composed of the United States, Old Ironsides, President, Chesapeake, Congress, and Constellation, the most famous battle ships of the war, that encountered the cruisers of the French, and later the English in the war of 1812.

They had no naval schools in those days.

Our great captains learned their skill by experience and from the example and inspiration of their commanders.

Under Commodore Barry had served Dale, and following the Revolution Jacob Jones, Decatur, Bainbridge, Charles Stewart, Somers, Barron, Mullany, in fact, directly and indirectly all the great commodore heroes of the later wars.

This new Navy was the beginning of our present Navy. It was the model till iron and steel took its place.

Barry was the proud inspiration and naval exemplar for the brightest names of the sea that illuminate our flag down to the civil war.

And now I have given the reason why I say, Mr. Speaker, that Commodore John Barry is the actual father of the American Navy.

His name is one of the purest and brightest among the galaxy of pleiads that swept the sea for liberty and for us.

Mr. Speaker, let us become as true and loyal as he was great. He, with blameless life and godlike act, has builded a noble pedestal. Let us make honor with ourselves by keeping his memory forever green around the statue we have placed upon it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, the eternal fitness of things is here being observed. This is a very appropriate occasion for the passage of this and other monument bills, which cause us for the time to turn our eyes from the present and the future and pay the nations's tribute of respect and honor to the lives and deeds of the great and good of former times. The fading flowers still lying on our late colleague Adams's desk remind us that after an active, busy, useful career he became weary of life and chose, before his call, to enter the great beyond, the unknown and unknowable mystic realm whence no traveler returns. Also that the angel of death has come again and summoned from his home and friends a distinguished Senator of the United States, and in respect to whose memory and services the House is soon to adjourn. These warnings are impressive and lead the mind to more solemn and serious thoughts and quicken the conscience to a keener sense of duty and obligation. The man endowed alone with intellectual capacity for success in business affairs is not the highest type of the human family. Without some of the finer and more modest tastes and virtues his life is frigid, and he can not afford much comfort to his companions. The heart as well as the head should be educated. It should be developed, refined, ennobled, and uplifted. Sentiment is a sweet and wholesome trait. A people devoid of it have but little hope. They may prosper for a while in material things, but as a nation their standards can not be high and noble, and as individuals they are strangers to many of the keenest pleasures and sweetest joys. Our country is rich and prosperous. Its income is large, and thus far we have been making liberal appropriations for the expenses of the Government and the development of our boundless natural resources that more wealth may be created. This practical business we now lay aside for the hour and engage in a little legislation for the sake of pure sentiment.

Looking backward is not a mistake. Hero worship is not a fault. The principles on which the great Republic was founded should be preserved, and the heroes who created the nation should be blessed and honored, and even idealized, as examples to the living. By our action here to-day we but feebly express the nation's gratitude and high esteem for a few of the distinguished dead who subdued the wilderness, achieved the independence, and adorned the literature of the American nation.

Nearly three centuries since, when Europe was in the throes of a religious revolution, and rulers strove to regulate the views and chain the consciences of men, a little band of resolute, rebellious souls, fearing naught but God, embarked in a frail and tiny craft. They bade farewell to relatives and friends, sundered all their sweet associations, and sailed away to seek their fortunes in a land unknown where worship might be free to them. They braved the dangers of an uncharted ocean, and landed on the forbidding shores of a savage wilderness. There they established a colony and called it "home." They were earnest, honest, bold, religious folk, fitted to the times, the climate, and the soil. Their virtues were severe and militant. They hewed their way into the primeval forests, opened schools, erected churches, and founded colleges, and laid the foundations of a vigorous, active, and enterprising civilization. To-day we provide for the erection of a stately shaft at Provincetown to immortalize their deeds and mark the spot where first they knelt and sanctified the soil.

Later on in the tide of time other white men came from the swarming hives across the seas and settled on our eastern shore—some for gold, some for conscience sake, and some for license. They were bold and fearless freedom-loving men, and jealous of their rights. The progeny of the Mayflower Pilgrims multiplied and prospered, and their influence and power spread beyond the limits of the Old Bay Colony. The compact signed in that good ship's cabin before they put a foot on shore was guarded as sacredly as the Jews protected the Book of Laws in the Ark of the Covenant. That was the first declaration of constitutional government in the New World, and served as a guide and inspiration for the great Charter which was to be. It came, and eight years of frightful war in its defense.

Britain was determined to crush out the rebellion, and considered neither men nor means. The colonial volunteers were sorely pressed, and the patriots' cause was languishing. Even the resolute soul of the great Commander in Chief was sad and filled with doubts and gloomy forebodings, when the battle of Princeton was fought and won. The enemy was driven toward the south, and the troops were inspired with fresh hope and courage. It was one of the decisive engagements of the war. By our appropriation here a monument will be erected to signalize that field of Mars and memorialize the brave and valiant heroes of that fight.

Kings Mountain was one of the most brilliant, complete, and decisive victories of the Revolution. The enemy had swept over the lowlands of Georgia and the Carolinas, and was marching toward the highlands in the west to complete the conquest of those States, when the resolute mountainers rallied to the encounter in defense of their homes and native heath. They repulsed, pursued, surrounded and killed or captured the British commander and all his royal troops. Cornwallis was frightened and beat a retreat, and the patriots of the Southland were electrified into new courage and more stubborn resistance. The tide of battle was there turned. It was the beginning of the end. We honor those resolute heroes, officers, and enlisted men, by providing for the erection of a fitting monument to their valor and glory.

A great nation must have literature as well as heroes, poets as well as patriots. Achilles would not have come down to us from the distant past as the beau ideal of dauntless chivalry had not Homer lived and written his great epic. What Burns is to the Scotchman, and Moore to the Irishman, Longfellow is to the American. He caught the traditions and melodies which were floating in the air and preserved them in beautiful immortal verse. He is the favorite of our youth, the joy of our advancing years, and the delight of all of his true-hearted countrymen. If not the greatest, he is the most beloved of all our poets. We are too parsimonious in our treatment of his claims. However, by this little appropriation a pedestal will be provided for a monument to be erected by his friends to the memory of Henry W. Longfellow.

Our countrymen have always taken a lively interest in John Paul Jones. He was a Scot by birth and a seaman by profession. He inherited a large plantation in Virginia, adopted an American patronymic, and espoused the cause of the Revolutionists at the commencement of the war. He was a soldier of fortune, a knight errant, who loved war for the sake of strife and courted the excitement and danger of battle. In America he enlisted under the standard of freedom and equal rights to all, and when the war was over he entered the service of Russia, the most despotic Government of Europe. The King of France made him a Knight of the Order of Merit, and the Empress of Russia conferred upon him the ribbon of St. Anne and granted him a pension from her bountiful treasury. He spent the remainder of his days amid the gayeties of the fascinating French capital and died in Paris. His guiding star was glory, and susceptibility to flattery his besetting weakness. His was an attractive, charming personality, and he was as brave, brilliant, and masterful as he was vain and spectacular. He acquired a fair knowledge of Spanish and French and was highly accomplished for a man of his early limited opportunities. He was able and resourceful and rendered invaluable assistance to the colonial cause. He was at home on the sea and a deep-water fighter. He carried the flag of the young Republic to the shores of Britain and caused it to be feared and respected. He bearded the lion in his lair and never gave nor asked for quarter, while he observed the rules of civilized warfare. His capture of the Drake astonished the French marines, who were astounded that a British sloop of war could be beaten by an inferior ship and equipment. The victory of the Richard over the Serapis was perhaps the most brilliant achievement in the annals of naval warfare. He attracted attention, and history has done him justice, and his reputation has been growing with passing years. Our people are disposed to recognize his splendid service and remarkable attainments, and we rejoice to do him honor. Although he chose to live and die abroad, we have just appropriated his remains and buried them at Annapolis with imposing national ceremonies, and as a further tribute of respect and gratitude the Congress directs that a costly monument be erected to his memory in the capital of the nation.

This day's record in commemorating some of the notable events and men of our early history would not be complete or acceptable to the country's sense of justice without a provision that an appropriate monument be erected to the honor and memory of that skillful seaman, determined fighter, able commander, worthy citizen, and incorruptible patriot, Commodore John Barry. During the Fifty-seventh Congress I introduced a bill for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington, to bear this significant inscription:

Erected to the Memory of John Barry,
Father of the American Navy.

Having failed of passage, I introduced a similar bill at the opening of the Fifty-eighth Congress, and again in this Congress, and have declined to modify it by omitting the above inscription. I now rejoice that the bill, in its general terms, receives the unanimous approval of my colleagues, but regret exceedingly that the distinguishing epitaph is not retained.

However, as he was patient and unassuming, so his admirers must follow his example and accept with due appreciation and gratitude this honorable tribute to his life and services. Time and eternal justice right all things. His monument will be erected in one of the beautiful parks of our capital city, where visitors will see it and inquire about him. The original records of our country's early life will be examined. The facts will be developed. Full and impartial history will be written and read, and Fighting Jack Barry will be enshrined in the grateful hearts of future generations as the father of the American Navy. Too much have his lofty character and splendid services been obscured by superficial and unappreciative analysts of modern times. Too long have his fair name and fame been neglected. But this bill and the monument will bring his personal character, his eventful career, and his remarkable victories in the cause of the struggling colonies into the lime light of critical examination. Then justice will be done him, and he will be assigned his proper place in America's pantheon of heroes and patriots.

Of Barry's early life little is known, nor is it very important. He was not of distinguished blood or lineage and made no pretensions. He was not heralded into this world by any popular demonstration. Indeed, so ordinary and obscure was the social status of his parents that the exact time and place of his nativity are not free from doubt. In childhood he was a poor Irish lad, one of millions who have been born in that beautiful isle of song and story, of legend and romance, of faith and superstition, of emerald fields and somber climate, and of brave men and virtuous women. He received his early impressions in that land of plenty and poverty, fertility and famine, courage and oppression, native ability and general ignorance, and all the unfortunate contrasts and contradictions which can be produced only where a generous, warm-hearted, and determined people are sought to be governed by a system of unjust, unwise, and tyrannical laws, and where they suffer all the ills which flow from resistance and reap none of the benefits which may come from obedience and acquiescence, and where the people, by reason of their love of freedom and justice, would not gracefully submit, and by reason of their lack of national unity and cohesion were unable to shake off their chains of bondage.

Barry was born proscribed. He was penalized from birth, and driven from home by the same foolish, short-sighted policy which provoked the revolution in the colonies. Early he took to the sea, visited America and made it the land of his adoption, and the Quaker City his permanent home. By studious habits and close application he largely made up for the lack of early education, which had been prohibited by law, and by willing hands, native ability, and untiring industry he quickly rose in his profession. At 21 he was a shipmaster, and at 30 he was captain of the best merchantman in America and a prosperous man, with excellent prospects.

The revolt against the mother country and armed resistance were by no means unanimous on the part of the colonists. Some were holding office under the Crown, and others were receiving special favors. Some were royalists at heart and believed in the tradition of the divine right of kings and that they could do no wrong. Representative government as we now understand it was at that time unknown, and the European mind could scarcely conceive of it as practical for a large and progressive country. And Americans were Europeans modified by a few years of climatic influence and political environment. Some were conservative, and were dismayed at the violent tendencies of the radical party, and a large proportion of the people of wealth, influence, and social position remained silent, inactive, and noncommittal. They had something to lose and feared the consequences. They sulked in their tents, or secretly gave aid and comfort to the enemy. Barry was not of these. He believed in the largest measure of freedom consistent with stable government. He was a Republican at heart. He hated injustice and oppression. He imbibed that hatred with his mother's milk and inhaled it with the breezes of his native heath. He had much to lose by failure, but he did not hesitate or consider results. He flung policy and discretion to the winds, and arrayed himself under the patriots' standard. He offered his services to Washington and they were accepted. He enlisted for the war, and continued the struggle in season and out of season, on sea and on land, wherever his service was most available, until the victory was won and the independence of the young Republic was recognized.

In a former speech in support of this bill I gave a fairly complete, but very condensed, sketch of Barry's life and services to his country, principally in the form of citations from original records and extracts from standard authorities of his time. They will not be repeated here; but it may not be inappropriate to state a few of the salient facts on which we predicate the claim that he, more than any other, deserves to be known as the father of the American Navy.

At the breaking out of the war he was master of the Black Prince, the finest merchant ship in America.

She was purchased by the First Congress, armored for war, and made the first battle ship of the first fleet, under the first commodore, and named the Alfred, after the father of the English navy.

He won the first naval victory of the war in the Continental service, and returned the first prize captured from the enemy in command of the Lexington, which was named after the first battle of the Revolution, and was the first ship that bore the Continental flag to victory on the ocean.

During the last three years of the Revolution he was the first officer of the Navy.

He fought the last battle of the war in command of the Alliance, the last and best ship of the Continental Navy.

He was the first captain of our present Navy.

He was appointed in 1794 and continued first in command until he died, in 1803.

When the Marine Committee, early in the hostilities, organized its most formidable fleet and appointed their captains, Barry was named far down on the list. Yet, while others were court-martialed or retired, or, being weary of the service, fell by the wayside, he constantly forged to the front until he became ranking officer, which position he retained until the end. Even Jones, after his great victory over the Serapis, retired on his laurels and never returned to this country.

Barry's birth, religion, and social position did not assist him, for in those times these circumstances were millstones rather than supports. He was kept on duty nearly all the time. He fought many battles, won many victories, took many valuable prizes, and was engaged in the most delicate and responsible commissions. Under all conditions he did his whole duty, and served his country with a devotion and singleness of purpose that compelled respect and admiration. His promotions were made on the merits, because his great ability and unswerving patriotism were known to his contemporaries. And when our present naval establishment was created in 1794, President Washington, the Secretary of War, and the Senate of the United States selected him and made him chief, because they considered him the fittest man for the exacting duties and responsibilities, and the most deserving of that distinction.

These are some of the facts and circumstances why his friends believe he is worthy to be named the father of the American Navy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that republics are not always ungrateful. It is our high honor and privilege to appropriate the people's money for a monument to John Barry, to be erected in the seat of our National Government. The millions of his friends throughout the country, who have waited patiently for this recognition, will be delighted with our action here to-day. It will accomplish more in fighting value than the same amount of money consumed in a few target shots by our great guns. It will be admired by generations of seamen yet unborn and will be a source of inspiration and encouragement for faithful, efficient, and patriotic service. It will quicken their pulses, nerve their muscles, and strengthen their determination for the crucial trials which may yet occur. And may the time never come when they will cease to profit by his example and emulate his virtues.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MONUMENT TO THE MEMORY OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 685) for the erection of a monument to the memory of John Paul Jones.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be erected in the city of Washington, D. C., a statue to the memory of John Paul Jones; and for the purpose of procuring and erecting said statue, with a suitable pedestal, and for the preparation of a site, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of a commission to be composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. That the commission herein created is empowered to select a site for the statue authorized by this act on ground belonging to the Government: Provided, That said statue shall not be located in the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, early in the Fifty-seventh Congress I introduced a bill for the erection of a statue to Paul Jones. It was favorably reported by the Committee on the Library, but failed to pass. I again introduced a bill in the Fifty-eighth Congress; again it was favorably reported by the Committee on the Library and again failed to be reached. The first day of this session I again introduced the bill. Early in this session the Senate passed a similar bill, and it is the Senate bill which the Committee on the Library reported and which is now under consideration. I spoke at some length in favor of this bill on one of the closing days of the Fifty-eighth Congress. I wish to say only a few words to-day.

It seemed to me fitting that a Representative from New Hampshire should introduce this bill. Paul Jones spent more time in the State I have the honor in part to represent than in any other section of the country except Virginia. His famous sloop of war, the Ranger, was built at Portsmouth, N. H., and was largely officered and manned by sons of that State. Our flag which floated over her was made by the girls of Portsmouth from their silk dresses, and it was the first American flag to receive a foreign naval salute. Paul Jones said that "the last ever seen of the Bon Homme Richard as she sank after capturing the Serapis was the defiant waving of that unconquered and unstricken flag."

Perhaps the turning point of the most marvelous sea duel ever fought was the throwing of a hand grenade from the main yard of the Bon Homme Richard through the hatchway and upon the gun deck of the Serapis, and there is every reason to believe that this was done by George Roberts, a New Hampshire sailor.

Paul Jones was the founder of the American Navy, as he was the first man to fly our flag on a regular man-of-war, the first to receive for it a foreign naval salute, and the first flying that flag to compel the surrender of a British man-of-war. He was a sailor at the age of 12, a mate at the age of 17, and captain of a full-rigged ship at the age of 21. The American Navy was constructed and manned upon the lines laid down by him in his famous reports to the Continental Congress. Few men in all our history have rendered more glorious and important services to the country than he.

A poor Scotch boy, self-educated, and yet when he had reached the age of 25 no man in the naval service of any country at this time was better educated or more accomplished than he. He was something more than the best and bravest sailor of his time, for as a diplomat and as a far-seeing statesman he ranked high among the great men of his generation. He was a personal friend of Franklin, Jefferson, and Washington, and was implicitly trusted by them. No abler, braver, more accomplished, more devoted, and unselfish man ever sailed or fought a ship. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to pay my tribute of respect to this great naval hero and to refer briefly to his life and achievements. One hundred and forty-six years ago an English ship slowly made her way up a broad river in tidewater Virginia. Upon her deck stood a boy not yet 13 years old, but he had already selected as his vocation the life of a sailor. He was born on the coast of Scotland, and his ancestors had also followed the sea. Forty years before his birth Scotland lost its independence, and the year preceding his birth the office of Scottish secretary of state at London—the last Scottish independent office—was abolished. He regarded the English as the oppressors of his people.

He was born of humble parentage, and every day in his native village there was brought home to his young mind the disadvantages attending his station in life. He learned early that in his own country men were born to positions of power and influence and that mental and physical endowments did not count for much as against the accident of birth. Early in life he learned to feel that for him the door of opportunity in the land of his birth was closed. From the sailors in near-by seaports he heard stories of a land beyond the sea where there were no distinctions of birth and where all men were equal. He heard also of the discontent which prevailed in this new land and felt that with the colonists beyond the sea he had a common cause against the same oppressor.

He eagerly embraced the opportunity of sailing on a vessel bound for Jamaica by way of Virginia. The voyage was a long and eventful one. For two weeks they were becalmed in mid-ocean, for two weeks they were aground on the banks of Newfoundland, for a week they plowed through tempestuous seas. Their provisions were almost exhausted when they reached the coast of Virginia and ascended the Rappahannock River.

We can imagine with what emotions John Paul Jones after his 3,000-mile voyage greeted the land of his dreams. It was early summer in Virginia. He was surrounded on all sides by a luxurious semitropical growth of trees; from the banks of the river came the song of birds; overhead were the bluest skies in all the world. The impression formed in the voyage up this beautiful river in the early summer of 1760 were lasting. He became then, at that early age, an American citizen. Thirty years later, when honors had been heaped upon him by other nations and when he was neglected and almost forgotten by the land of his adoption, in a letter written to the Dutch minister at The Hague he said:

America has been the country of my fond election from the age of 13, when I first saw it.

The voyage up the Rappahannock ended at Fredericksburg. On an estate near Fredericksburg lived an elder brother who left Scotland before his birth and whom he had never seen. Paul Jones immediately repaired to his residence and the two brothers met for the first time on the banks of the swiftly flowing river. In a few days the harrowing experiences of his long ocean voyage wore away and he was able to calmly view his suroundings.

Three thousand miles of ocean separated him from the land he had learned to hate. He saw here the palatial homes, the splendid sloping lawns, the great tobacco fields of colonial Virginia. He saw the easy, luxurious life of the Virginian planter. He watched the carriages roll past his brother's house, but there were no coats of arms emblazoned on the panels. There were no distinctions of rank. Opportunities were not presented to a favored few, but to all alike. In front of him were 3,000 miles of ocean with all its opportunity for adventure; back of him lay 3,000 miles of forest. Between the mighty ocean and the almost limitless forest lay colonial Virginia, with its great rushing rivers, smiling under skies as blue as any that could be found in far-off Italy. In this favored land he was tasting for the first time the sweets of liberty.

His mind was soon made up. He cast his lot with the colony of Virginia. Back of him in the forest was land to be had for the asking. But in front of him lay the great ocean, and his mind turned to the sea. He realized that in order to become something more than a common sailor he must study navigation, geography, mathematics; that he must improve his knowledge of English and acquire a knowledge of French, German, and Spanish. He decided to remain in Virginia and to diligently prepare himself for a career upon the sea.

For the next three years he pursued his studies amid the quiet of his brother's plantation. At the end of this period he was tendered the position of third mate of the King George, of White Haven—a stanch brig of three sails and topmast, with a crew of sixty-five men and officers—being anxious to put in practice the theories he had acquired. He accepted at once, and sailed away. For the next ten years he followed the sea. He rapidly advanced in rank. The vessels upon which he was employed were engaged in part in the slave trade. After five years of this service he became so disgusted at its enormities, which he characterized as a "violation of the rights of man," that he resigned a position as chief mate of a brigantine and returned to Scotland as a passenger on another vessel. On the way the captain and mate died. Jones assumed command, and brought the vessel safely into port. For this service he was, at the age of 18, appointed master of the vessel he had so successfully navigated. In this vessel he made two trips to the West Indies and the American coast. His reputation as a successful mariner was now established.

His rapid rise in rank attracted the envy of older men, and the grossest calumnies were circulated about him. During the progress of the Amrican Revolution these calumnies were kept alive, and until quite a recent period, and perhaps now, they are still believed in England. He was charged, without the slightest proof to sustain it, with engaging in the smuggling business. This in the latter years of his life he indignantly denied. He was charged with having caused his ship's carpenter to be so severely punished that he died from the effects of it. All the affidavits taken at the inquest showed that the man was never punished and that he died of a fever.

On one of his voyages he was compelled to quell a mutiny on his ship and subdued a huge mulatto with a belaying pin. The negro died soon after as a result of the blow he received. The young captain surrendered at once to the authorities and was fully exonerated. On his return to England his enemies caused him to be arrested and tried on the charge of murder. He conducted his own defense and displayed a thorough knowledge of the law applicable to the case. During the progress of the trial the King's counsel asked him:

Captain Paul, are you in conscience satisfied that you used no more force than was necessary to preserve discipline on your ship?

To which he answered:

May it please the most honorable court, sir, I would say that it became necessary to strike the mutinous sailor Maxwell. Whenever it becomes necessary for a commanding officer to strike a seaman it is necessary to strike with a weapon. I may say that the necessity to strike carries with it the necessity to kill or to completely disable the mutineer. I had two brace of loaded pistols in my belt, and could easily have shot him. I struck with a belaying pin in preference, because I hoped that I might subdue him without killing him. But the result proved otherwise. I trust that the honorable court and the jury will take due account of the fact that though amply provided with pistols throwing ounce balls, necessarily fatal weapons, I used a belaying pin, which, though a dangerous, is not necessarily a fatal weapon.

It would be difficult to more accurately state the law applicable to the case. Jones was acquitted.

In 1773, he again, this time as captain of a West Indiaman, sailed up the Rappahannock and anchored below his brother's plantation. He found his brother unconscious and dying. Shortly after the arrival of the young captain his brother died without regaining consciousness. Under the will Captain Jones succeeded to his brother's estate. He turned over the command of his vessel to his first mate and stepped from the deck of a British ship into the idyllic life of a Virginia planter. He found himself the owner of a plantation of 3,000 acres, well stocked with horses and cattle, a sloop of 20 tons, a mill, a thrashing floor, and thirty slaves.

His real name was John Paul. At this time he assumed also the name of Jones. Why he did this has never been made quite clear. The story heretofore generally accepted is that the estate originally belonged to William Jones, a distant relative, who made William Paul his heir upon condition that he assume the name of Jones, and who provided also in his will that, upon the death of William Paul, the young captain should succeed to this estate provided he also assumed the name of Jones. Colonel Buell, who has written the most pretentious life of John Paul Jones, still clings to this story, in the edition of his book which was published just before his death, two years ago, and insists that he assumed the name of Jones in order to inherit the Virginia estate. Recent investigations, however, in Virginia have brought to light the will of William Paul, executed just before his death, to which is simply signed the name of William Paul, and from which it appears that he never assumed the name of Jones. This completely disposes of this theory.

Why he assumed the name of Jones makes but litle difference now. It was, however, not singular for seafaring men to adopt another name in those days. Although only 27 years old, he had experienced a long career in the merchant navy of Great Britain. He had commanded some of her largest vessels. He had already made for himself a most enviable record as a British commander. We have the right to believe that he could now see in the future another career, not as commander of a British vessel, but a position in the navy of another nation about to spring into existence.

The Stamp Act had been passed and had been repealed. The house of burgesses in his own colony of Virginia had been the first to protest against unjust taxation, and Virginia was still ringing with the powerful eloquence of Patrick Henry. The late wars, undertaken largely, as England claimed, for the benefit of the colonies, left the mother country oppressed with a national debt of $645,000,000. In England there was a fixed determination to compel the colonies to assist in its payment, and Paul Jones knew it. In America there was a fixed determination to resist what was considered unjust taxation, and Paul Jones knew that also. The colonies were rich and powerful. They sustained a population of 3,000,000 people. The intercolonial wars had been brought to a successful conclusion. The military spirit predominated. It was apparent to Jones that war between the two great sections of the English-speaking people was inevitable. He had trained himself to be something more than the captain of a merchant vessel. He had already determined to cast his lot with the colonists. He was in full sympathy with the anti-English sentiment which now permeated the colonies. Writing to a friend he said:

I was born in Britain, but I do not inherit the degenerate spirit of that fallen nation which I at once lament and despise.

Under the name of John Paul he had been a prominent figure in the merchant navy of England. He saw opening to his feet a new career in the new navy of a new nation.

What could be more natural than that he should follow the caprice so common among sailors at that time; that he should determine to cut loose from the past as much as possible and under a new name win for himself an honorable place among the founders of a new nation? He saw his chance approaching.

Lord Nelson said:

A naval officer, unlike a military commander, can have no fixed plans. He must always be ready for the chance. It may come tomorrow, or next week, or never, but he must be always ready.

The next two years he devoted to quiet study. He made frequent visits to Williamsburg and attended the sessions of the house of burgesses. He heard the wonderful eloquence of Patrick Henry and the splendid logic of Thomas Jefferson. As a cultured Virginia gentleman he was able to meet and become acquainted with the leading men of the colonies. He became the personal friend of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, the Lees, and Mr. Livingston. Writing in his journal of January, 1775, he said:

I availed myself of these occasions to assure Colonel Washington, Mr. Jefferson, and all the others that my services would be at their disposal whenever their cause should require service on my own element, which would, of course, be coincident with the outbreak of regular hostilities on the land.

He read the signs aright. Three months later the shot was fired at Lexington and the whole country was ablaze with war.

On land the colonies were well prepared for the struggle. It was possible to organize at once armies of men trained to the use of arms. War offensive and defensive was at once undertaken and large expeditions set out for the invasion of Canada. In the intercolonial wars experienced generals had been developed who were well qualified to command.

On the sea the colonies were absolutely helpless. They had nearly a thousand miles of coast line and not a single ship with which to defend it. The commerce of the colonies had already assumed considerable proportions. It was threatened with complete destruction. The colonial wars had not developed naval commanders or naval constructors. The opportunity for which John Paul Jones had waited was here. The career for which he had prepared himself was open.

He at once tendered his services to the Continental Congress. Before Congress had time to accept his tender of service, and before the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, he had commenced the work of naval preparation. He heard that two French frigates had put in at Hampton Roads. He at once loaded his sloop with the delicacies of the season from his own plantation and, sailing out to the French vessels, presented the provisions to the French officers with the compliments of the Virginia planters. In this way he gained access to the ships and received permission to obtain information and make drawings of the plan—the hull, arrangement of battery, and other technical particulars of the larger vessel. His complete mastery of the French language and his charming personality so pleased the French officers that they permitted him to remain for three days on the ship and to obtain the most complete data. He informed them that he wanted the information for the guidance of the marine department of the new Government, which he assured them would be formed within the next two months and which would fight it out with England to the bitter end. The information thus obtained by Jones was utilized, and twelve months later the American frigate Alliance was built on exactly the same lines and mounted the same battery as the vessel whose plans he obtained.

Three days before the battle of Bunker Hill the Continental Congress appointed a naval committee. At the first session of this committee the chairman was authorized to invite John Paul Jones, of Virginia, master mariner, to lay before the committee such information as might be useful in assisting the committee to discharge its labors. He at once repaired to Philadelphia and entered upon the career which was to emblazon forever his name in the naval history of the world.

No more important task was ever confided to any man. He was not yet 28 years old, but he was called upon to build, equip, and organize, in time of war, a navy able to hold in check the powerful armada of one of the oldest commercial nations in the world. The preliminary work was most important. There was no other man in any of the colonies so able to undertake the work, and perhaps in the navies of Europe it would have been impossible to have found an officer so well qualified to undertake the difficult task presented now to this young Virginia planter. He was requested to report on two general subjects: First, "The proper qualifications of naval officers," and, second, "The kind or kinds of armed vessels most desirable for the service of the United Colonies, keeping in view the limited resources of the Congress." He entered upon his work with energy and enthusiasm. He was requested to report also upon naval personnel and material. His reports were soon ready and were laid before the committee without a word of revision.

A hundred and thirty summers have come and gone since then. The navy founded by John Paul Jones will soon, even in this era of great navies, become the most powerful in the world. The great state papers of the early years of the American Republic have been carefully preserved in our histories and the principles enunciated therein have been taught to our children. The report made by John Paul Jones on this occasion has apparently been forgotten, but upon it a navy was built and organized and operated even to this day. In this present year, in the time of our naval supremacy, when so much depends upon sea power; at this time, when there seems to be a disposition to do justice to the memory of this great man, it ought to be possible to assign to this report its proper place among the greatest of our public documents. It might be interesting at this time to read portions of it. It commences with this prophetic statement:

> As this is to be the foundation, or, I might say, the first keel timber of a new navy, which all patriots must hope shall become among the foremost in the world, it should be well begun in the selection of the first list of officers. You will pardon me, I know, if I say that I have enjoyed much opportunity during my sea life to observe the duties and responsibilities that are put upon naval officers.
> It is by no means enough that an officer of the Navy should be a capable mariner. He must be that, of course, but also a great deal more.

He then proceeds to define the qualifications of a naval officer—and we have been educating naval officers along the lines laid down by John Paul Jones for nearly a hundred years. The report concludes as follows:

> You are called upon to found a new navy; to lay the foundation of a new power afloat that must sometime, in the course of human events, become formidable enough to dispute even with England the mastery of the ocean. Neither you or I may live to see such growth. But we are here at the planting of the tree, and maybe some of us must, in the course of destiny, water its feeble and struggling roots with our blood. If so, let it be so! We can not help it. We must do the best we can with what we have at hand.

With reference to this report George Washington said after he had read it:

> Mr. Jones is clearly not only a master mariner within the scope of the art of navigation, but he also holds a strong and powerful sense of the political and military weight of command at sea. His powers of usefulness are great and must be constantly kept in view.

In the building of the new Navy John Paul Jones was the guiding spirit, and his suggestions were carefully carried out in the minutest particulars. The new vessels were built under his supervision and upon plans suggested by him. A few old merchant vessels were purchased and turned over to Jones to be converted into serviceable armed vessels, and these ships comprised the nucleus of the new Navy, which was destined to grow and increase in power and strength until the expectations of Jones were realized, and to-day we are ready to contend, if necessary, with any of the Old World powers for the mastery of the seas.

In December, 1775, when the building of the new Navy was well under way, Paul Jones was given his first commission. He at once repaired to the Alfred, to which ship he had been assigned, accompanied by Thomas Jefferson, Robert Morris, Charles Carroll, and others of almost equal prominence, and with his own hand flung out from the masthead of our first man-of-war the first American flag ever displayed upon the seas. This was the "Pine tree and rattlesnake" emblem, with the motto, "Don't tread on me." Afterwards, in his journal, Jones writes:

> I always abhorred this device and was glad when it was discarded for one much more symmetrical, as well as appropriate, a year and a half later.

On the 14th of June, 1777, Congress passed this resolution:

> Resolved, That the flag of the thirteen United States of America be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars in a blue field representing a new constellation.
> Resolved, That Captain John Paul Jones be appointed to command the ship Ranger.

Thus John Paul Jones became not only the father of the American Navy, but his name will always be inseparably connected with the origin of our national emblem. He accepted this resolution as a distinction beyond his wildest dreams and was accustomed to say:

> That flag and I are twins, born the same hour from the same womb of destiny. We can not be parted in life or in death. So long as we can float, we shall float together. If we must sink, we shall go down as one!

A few days afterwards, on the first anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, Jones displayed the new emblem from the masthead of the Ranger and sailed for France. In the following February he sailed through the "Grand French Fleet" in Brest Roads and received the first salute ever offered by the guns of a foreign fleet to the Stars and Stripes.

It is not my purpose to recount the splendid achievements of our first American admiral. It is said that republics are ungrateful. I believe this Republic has been ungrateful only in its failure to properly recognize the services and honor the memory of this great knight of the sea. He accomplished upon the ocean what George Washington accomplished upon the land. Most of our histories barely mention his name. You must hunt in out of the way places for the real story of John Paul Jones.

During the Revolution he fought twenty-three battles at sea and was never vanquished. Seven times he made victorious descents upon Great Britain and her colonies. He captured many ships—two of them of equal force with his own and two of them of far superior force. He compelled Great Britain to fortify all her ports and forced her to desist from pillaging and burning in America and to exchange as prisoners of war Americans who had been confined in prisons as "traitors, pirates, and felons."

The war had been in progress for nearly five years. The superior resources of the British were beginning to tell. Defeats did not discourage the Americans, but the continental currency was constantly depreciating in value. The war was being carried on under circumstances of great discouragement. The unequal contest seemed about to terminate in favor of the stronger nation. But at this time there came the news of a splendid victory for the Americans on the seas. It spread with great rapidity through the colonies. The worn-out, poorly clad, discouraged soldiers of Washington's army gathered in little groups about their camp fires and thrilled with patriotic pride as they listened to the story of the greatest sea fight in history as it came to them in the official reports of the great Franklin at Paris.

The victory of Jones and the Bon Homme Richard in the British Channel brought back courage to the men who were fighting for liberty. It gave to the American cause an impetus which carried it over the surrender of Charleston—beyond the crushing defeat at Camden! It enabled it to survive the shame of Arnold's treason. It remained a source of inspiration for American soldiers and sailors until the surrender at Yorktown and the long war was over. Many decades have come and gone. We have long since taken our place as a world power. The Navy founded by Paul Jones has attained the proportions and prestige he predicted for it. We look back over a brilliant series of naval victories—some of the greatest of them in the immediate past—but the story which most thrills an American heart is the story of the great sea fight which occurred one hundred and twenty-seven years ago under the white cliffs of old England.

It was late in September, 1779. The great Baltic fleet from London and New Castle had at last set sail—thirty days behind time. British merchants were in a state of terror—the war had been brought home to them. The ever-victorious Paul Jones was sailing around the British Isles—terrifying seaports—capturing every day the merchant vessels of England. But at last two ships of the line had been provided, and under their protection the Baltic fleet sailed. Under the guns of the Sarapis they felt safe. In all the navy of Great Britain there was only one stronger ship, but she was at that time 3,000 miles away in American waters. As the Baltic fleet sailed along the coast of England, there came down from the north the ships under the command of John Paul Jones, and, just as the sun went down, the Scrapis and the flagship of the American admiral engaged in awful conflict. There was hardly wind enough to stir the sails of the contending ships; and as the harvest moon rose over the arc of the North Sea, the ships were made fast together by the American commander. On the cliffs along the shore thousands of people had congregated to witness the capture of the terror of the seas.

The British crew fought within sight of the shores of England. Just behind them were the strongest fortifications in the world. All around them were the armed vessels of the strongest naval power on the globe; their ships were vastly superior to the American vessels. The Americans were fighting 3,000 miles from home and friends in a converted French merchant vessel that had once been condemned. Their commander had been proclaimed a pirate, and if he had been captured at that time he would have been at once executed. His officers were fighting with ropes around their necks.

Slowly the moon rose, shedding a flood of light on the awful scene of carnage. For nearly three hours the battle had raged. The American vessel was sinking. All the guns in one of her batteries had exploded. The terrified master at arms had released 200 British prisoners who had been confined below the decks. Her consort, under comand of a traitor, who had already bargained for a place in the British navy, had discharged a broadside into the sinking ship; her hatches were crowded with the horribly mangled bodies of 227 dead men; her decks were slippery with the blood of dead and dying men; one of her officers was crying for quarter; but over it all, high up toward the stars, floated still the banner of the young Republic.

In a lull of the battle, as the full harvest moon lighted up the scene disclosing to view the awful condition of the American ship, the British commander said, "Sir, have you struck?" and John Paul Jones replied, "Sir, I have but this moment commenced to fight;" and the fight continued until from a sinking ship he stepped upon the conquered decks of the enemy's vessel. Never before in all history had a ship been captured by the vessel she had sunk—it has never happened since, and it is improbable that it will ever happen again.

All the living men on board the American ship were transferred to the captured vessel. Jones in his journal wrote with splendid eloquence: "No one was now left aboard the Richard but our dead. To them I gave the good old ship for their coffin, and in her they found a sublime sepulcher." At her masthead still floated the Stars and Stripes. It was the same flag that was made by the girls of Portsmouth out of slices from their best silk gowns and presented by them to Jones. It was the same flag Jones hoisted on the Ranger on the first anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, and it was the first flag to be saluted by the guns of a foreign power. But upon the decks of the sinking vessel lay the bodies of 250 men, who had fought to keep it flying, and the great sea knight had not the heart to take it from them. In after years he wrote:

As I had given them the good old ship for their sepulcher, I now gave to my immortal dead the flag they had so desperately defended for their winding sheet.

Three years later, when Jones visited Philadelphia, he met again one of the young ladies who had assisted in making the flag, and, by way of apology, explained to her that it had been his most ardent desire to bring home the flag with all its glories and return it to the fair hands that gave it to him. But he said:

I could not bear to strip it from the old ship in her last agony, nor could I deny to my dead on her decks, who had given their lives to keep it flying, the glory of taking it with them.

And the young lady replied:

You did right. That flag is just where we all wish it to be—flying at the bottom of the sea over the only ship that ever sunk in victory. If you had taken it from her and brought it back to us, we would hate you!

At the close of the Revolution Jones accepted employment and honors from other nations, but never without having first obtained permission from the United States Government to do so. After the war was over he was sent abroad by Congress to acquire information that might be valuable in continuing the development of the navy he had founded. In pursuance of these instructions, he accepted an important command in the Russian navy and rendered brilliant service on the Black Sea. Writing to Franklin a year before his death, and referring to his Russian service, he said:

You are sensible I did not accept the offer of Her Imperial Majesty with a view to detach myself from the service of America, but that I have done my utmost to fulfill the intention of Congress in sending me last to Europe, "to acquire the degree of knowledge which may hereafter render me more extensively useful."

He died as he had lived since he was 13 years old, an American citizen. Just before his death he summoned two notaries to his bedside and dictated his will, in which he described himself as "Mr. John Paul Jones, a citizen of the United States of America, now residing in Paris." He was buried in the old Protestant cemetery at Paris.

Immediately after his death the clouds which had been gathering over France broke, and there followed the awful period of the French Revolution. The world was thinking of other things and his place of burial was forgotten. For over a hundred years his body rested in an unmarked grave. For over a hundred years he was apparently forgotten by his country.

No man ever made greater personal sacrifices. During the progress of the war his plantation was ravaged by the British—his buildings were all destroyed; his orchards cut down; his stock driven away; nothing was left but the bare ground. He visited the ruins in 1777, and turning sadly away, never returned to the scene again. The greater portion of his estate, in fact nearly all of it, consisted of certain adjudicated claims against the United States, growing out of prize money due him, which he generously refused to present for payment during his lifetime. There was due him the sum of $50,000. This sum was paid to his heirs by the Government fifty-six years after his death.

In 1848 an effort was made to bring back his remains, but Congress could not be interested in the subject and the project failed.

As the years passed it came to be generally believed that the body had been destroyed by quicklime, and that its recovery and recognition was impossible.

In 1899 Gen. Horace Porter took up the work that had been abandoned for fifty years, and as a result of his efforts the place of burial of John Paul Jones was located.

I became convinced four years ago that through his efforts the place of burial had been definitely located, and I introduced in Congress, on November 19, 1903, a joint resolution making an appropriation for the purpose of making the necessary excavations and for the purpose of removing the body to this country.

My resolution was indorsed by the Daughters of the American Revolution in national congress assembled. Other patriotic societies followed with similar resolutions.

I did the best I could to convince the country that General Porter was entitled to substantial aid from Congress and to the cordial support and cooperation of patriotic citizens. I was satisfied that if it could be demonstrated that Jones was buried in a leaden casket the body could be recovered. After devoting considerable time to the subject, I found that everything that has ever been written about John Paul Jones is based either upon the Edinburgh life of Jones, published in 1826, or the Sherburne collection, published in New York in 1825. The Edinburgh life of Jones contained a letter from Colonel Blackden to Mrs. Taylor, a sister of John Paul Jones, which, it seemed to me, settled forever the question as to whether or not the remains were buried in a leaden casket. The following is a copy of the letter:

GREAT TICHFIELD STREET, LONDON, August 9, 1792.

MADAM: I had the honor of receiving your letter of the 3d instant, and shall answer you most readily. Your brother, Admiral Jones, was not in good health for about a year, but had not been so unwell as to keep house. For two months past he began to lose his appetite, to grow yellow, and show signs of jaundice. For this he took medicine and seemed to grow better, but about ten days before his death his legs began to swell, which increased upward, so that two days before his exit he could not button his waistcoat and had great difficulty of breathing.

I visited him every day, and, beginning to be apprehensive of his danger, desired him to settle his affairs, but this he put off until the afternoon of his death, when he was prevailed on to send for a notary and made his will. Mr. Beaupoil and myself witnessed it at about 8 o'clock in the evening and left him sitting in a chair. A few minutes after we retired he walked into his chamber and laid himself upon his face on the bedside, with his feet on the floor. After the Queen's physician arrived they went into the room and found him in that position, and upon taking him up they found he had expired.

His disorder had terminated in dropsy of the breast. His body was put in a leaden coffin on the 20th, that in case the United States, whom he had so essentially served, and with so much honor to himself, should claim his remains, they might be more easily removed. This is all, madam, that I can say concerning his illness and death.

I sent copies of this letter and copies of the reports of General Porter's investigations to many prominent American citizens in an effort to interest them in General Porter's work in this connection. Among others I wrote to Colonel Buell, of Philadelphia, calling his attention to the evidence and asking him, in the next edition of his life of John Paul Jones, to publish this evidence and revise the statement in his book, which was to the effect that, in his judgment, the remains could not be identified. I received from him the following reply written a short time before his death:

PEN AND PENCIL CLUB,
1026 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, February 7, 1904.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of the 4th instant I would say, first, that I am not descended from Paul Jones, but from one of his subordinates, Henry Gardner, of Nantucket, who was my maternal great-grandfather.

With regard to the remains of Paul Jones I would say that my own investigations are recorded on pages 365 and 366, Volume II, of the second (revised) edition of my "Life" of him.

From that you will perceive that I do not consider the discovery or identification of his remains possible.

But I will venture to offer a suggestion, which is entirely practicable, and, from my point of view, of equal historical interest.

The Academy of Fine Arts in this city has a bust of Paul Jones, by Houdon, made in Paris in 1786, and presented by Jones to his friend

Gen. William Irvine. This bust, I believe, could be acquired by Congress to be placed in Statuary Hall (the old Hall of the House) in the Capitol.

The work was pronounced by Jones himself, Jefferson, Gouverneur Morris, Lafayette, and others who knew the Commodore intimately to be a perfect likeness. In view of the impossibility of discovering the remains, it seems to me that the only practical and appropriate tribute the nation can pay to the memory of the founder of its Navy would be that of placing this original bust, molded from life, in Statuary Hall among the immortal soldiers and statesmen whom the people delight to honor in memory. Your honorable committee might, if you think well of the suggestion, send a representative to the Academy of Fine Arts to ascertain whether or not the bust of Paul Jones could be acquired by Congress for the purpose indicated.

Very truly, yours, AUGUSTUS C. BUELL.

NOTE.—So far as I know there are no surviving relatives of Paul Jones in this country, and I have not been able to trace any in Scotland.

A. C. B.

Another edition of Buell's Life of Jones is just out. It was published after his death. It does not contain the matter I asked him to insert, but it does contain General Porter's illustrated article which recently appeared in the Century Magazine, and which tells the story of the successful search for the remains of this great naval hero.

On February 13, 1905, the matter of recovering the remains was made the subject of a special message from the President to Congress. On March 2, 1905, my resolution was reported out. It was too late then to get it through. General Porter, however, at his own expense continued the work in which he was engaged, and to his energy, enthusiasm, and patriotism is due the fact that the remains of this great man repose now in the land he loved.

My attention to the details connected with the matter satisfied me that General Porter had expended out of his own funds in carrying on the search the sum of at least $35,000. I wrote to him advising him that I proposed to introduce a bill to reimburse him for this outlay, and received from him the following reply:

NO. 277 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK, December 5, 1905.

DEAR SIR: I have had the pleasure of receiving your highly esteemed letter informing me that you propose to move an appropriation by Congress to reimburse me for the sums expended in the work of recovering the body of John Paul Jones. While I deeply appreciate the extreme kindness of your intention, I feel that I must say to you what I have said to a number of Members of Congress who have been good enough to make a similar suggestion, that the search and excavations were made not in my official capacity, but as a purely personal undertaking without any intention of looking to the Government for reimbursement, and that I trust that no bill may be introduced for that purpose.

I should be much more gratified to have Congress add the amount which might be thought to be due me to the contemplated appropriation for ornamenting the crypt of the chapel at Annapolis, which is to be the permanent resting place of the illustrious dead.

Yours, very sincerely,

HORACE PORTER.

HON. HENRY T. RAINEY, M. C.

The naval appropriation bill this year carries an additional $35,000 for this purpose, in compliance with the suggestion of General Porter. About the time of the discovery of the body reports were circulated and are still being circulated in certain quarters, to the effect that the body of Jones had been removed from Paris by his mother and buried in the churchyard of his native village in Scotland, and this story is still occasionally referred to in the American press. I at once caused it to be investigated by our consul at Glasgow, Scotland, and received from him the following report, which effectually disposes of the matter:

CONSULAR SERVICE, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Glasgow, Scotland, May 15, 1905.

HON. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Carrollton, Ill., United States of America.

DEAR SIR: I received your letter of April 27, inclosing an article from the St. Paul Pioneer Press on the subject of the burying place of John Paul Jones, and note the statement therein concerning Mrs. William Preston to the effect that his body had been reinterred at Kirkbean, Scotland, etc.

I may say to you that I have been reliably informed that this story was first telegraphed from Washington to California and then used from there presumably for newspaper effect. However, I have investigated the entire matter, so far as Kirkbean is concerned, and I find that John Paul Jones was never buried there and that there never has been any tradition that he was buried there. His father, however, is buried there, and there is a headstone over the grave with this inscription:

"In memory of John Paul, senior, who died at Abigland the 24 October, 1767, universally esteemed. Erected by John Paul, junior."

The fact that the father is buried there probably has given rise to the later story credited to Mrs. Preston, if there be such a woman at all, as I am very much inclined to doubt.

I reinclose the clipping, as you may desire it.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. M. TAYLOR, Consul.

All these questions are settled forever.

The last voyage of the greatest of all sea fighters is over. There is yet ringing in our ears the solemn salute to an admiral of the American Navy which welcomed him home. In the land of his selection, under the flag he loved, he sleeps well to-day. We are doing the best we can to atone for a century of neglect. The little navy he built is out of commission; the ships he commanded are gone; but the future he predicted for America and the American Navy is here. In all parts of the pathless deep the sea birds are screaming around the flag of freedom as it floats above the decks of our great steel battle ships.

To-day, with uncovered heads, we reverently stand about the grave of this great man and join in the prayer of the chaplain just before the body was placed in the tomb:

God of our fathers, we praise Thee for the life and memory of him whose mortal remains are now to find a resting place under the flag he so loved, in the nation he did so much to create.

[Loud applause.]

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4370) to appropriate the sum of $40,000 as a part contribution toward the erection of a monument at Provincetown, Mass., in commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims and the signing of the Mayflower compact.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, to aid in erecting a monument at Provincetown, Mass., in commemoration of the first landing of the Pilgrims on Cape Cod and the signing of the compact in the cabin of the Mayflower in the harbor of said Provincetown: Provided, That the said sum of $40,000 shall not be payable until there shall have been raised and made available for the erection of said monument an additional sum of at least $40,000: Provided further, That the design of said monument shall be approved by the Secretary of War, the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the president of the Cape Cod Pilgrims' Memorial Association; and the money for the erection of said monument shall be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of War, the governor of Massachusetts, and the president of the Cape Cod Pilgrims' Memorial Association: And provided further, That the responsibility for the care and keeping of said monument shall be and remain with the Cape Cod Pilgrims' Memorial Association, it being expressly understood that the United States shall have no responsibility therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

STATUE IN HONOR OF THE LATE HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution (S. R. 20) directing the selection of a site for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the preparation of the site so selected and the erection of the pedestal the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the design for said statute shall be approved by the commission herein created.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO COMMEMORATE THE BATTLE OF PRINCETON.

Mr. WOOD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (S. 333) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton, and appropriating $30,000 therefor, which I send to the Clerk's desk, be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The tenure of office of said judge of said court shall be fifteen years, unless sooner removed by the President for cause; the tenure of office of the other officials of the court shall be at the pleasure of the President.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reserve and set aside for town-site purposes, and to survey, lay out, and plat into town lots, streets, alleys, and parks, not less than 80 acres of said land at or near the present settlements of Browning and Babb, and each of such other places as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary or convenient for town sites, in such manner as will best subserve the present needs and the reasonable prospective growth of said settlements. Such town sites shall be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of as provided in section 2381 of the United States Revised Statutes: Provided, That any person who, at the date when the appraisers commence their work upon the land, shall be an actual resident upon any one such lot and the owner of substantial and permanent improvements thereon, and who shall maintain his or her residence and improvements on such lot to the date of his or her application to enter, shall be entitled to enter at any time prior to the day fixed for the public sale, and at the appraised value thereof, such lot and any one additional lot of which he or she may also be in possession and upon which he or she may have substantial and permanent improvements: Provided further, That before making entry of any such lot or lots, the applicant shall make proof to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which the land lies of such residence, possession, and ownership of improvements, under such regulations as to time, notice, manner, and character of proof as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in making their appraisal of the lots so surveyed it shall be the duty of the appraisers to ascertain the names of the residents upon and occupants of any such lots, the character and extent of the improvements thereon, and the name of the reputed owner thereof, and to report their findings in connection with their report of appraisal, which report of findings shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set out. All such lots not so entered prior to the day fixed for the public sale shall be offered at public outcry in their regular order with the other unimproved and unoccupied lots: Provided, however, That no lot shall be sold for less than $10: And provided further, That said lots when surveyed shall approximate 50 by 150 feet in size.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to demand a second, I beg to ask what motion is made?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, from the Clerk's reading of the bill, it is not a printed bill.

Mr. LACEY. The motion is to pass it as amended. There are a number of amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to demand a second, I will ask the gentleman from Montana whether any committee has reported upon the bill according to the motion?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The committee on Indian Affairs reported unanimously; and the amendments are those recommended by the Commission of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Has the committee recommended the passage of the bill with amendments, and when?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. This morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand a second.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to a second being considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will say to the gentleman the bill is in the usual form——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no printed report on this bill, so that we can not find out what the facts are on the amendments which the committee recommended. I suppose the gentleman will make some explanation.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will say that the bill was originally——

Mr. MANN. Pardon me. Before making the explanation, will the gentleman not only explain the amendments, but how it happens, if the bill is in the usual form, it is necessary to make any amendment to the bill?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Yes; I will explain. A bill similar to this passed the Senate as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. Not having been considered by the House committee, the House conferees refused to agree to it. A week or ten days ago I introduced the bill, and it was referred to the House committee, and referred by the House committee to the Secretary of the Interior, and by him to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for his report. We did not get a meeting to report the bill until this morning, not having gotten a quorum on last Thursday. The House committee adopted the amendments offered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the bill, and unanimously reported the bill to the House, but only having been reported this morning, it was impossible to have the report printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did the committee adopt all the amendments suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs through the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. They adopted all the amendments suggested by him excepting that limiting the time for the holding in trust by the Government of the water rights for the lands allotted to the Indians. The committee have put the period eight years from this date for taking out the Indian water ditches.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The committee adopted every amendment suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with the exception of the limitation of time placed on the period for making the appropriations for the Indian water rights, making it five years from the date of approval of the allotments, which will make it about eight years from this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What time does the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommend?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. He suggested that it be made to run with the Indian patents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, as the committee did not adopt that suggestion as to the water rights, it is just possible under the bill as amended at present to appropriate the 80 acres of irrigable lands?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. There are 80 acres of irrigable lands and 240 acres of grazing lands to each adult Indian.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it possible that the 80 acres of irrigable lands the Indians get may lose their water rights if it is limited to the time adopted by the committee rather than the life of the patent?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Senate bill did not contain that and did not make any such provision. It was my own suggestion that the water be appropriated for them by act of Congress, and that they be given five years in which to take out their ditches.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The action of the Senate has no great weight with me in questions of this character. I understand the gentleman to say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended the water be apportioned for the life of the Indian patents, which would be twenty-five years. Now, the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House changed the time to eight years. It is upon the theory, I suppose, that within that time these Indians would have obtained sufficient funds from the sale of surplus lands to enable them to take the advantage of the appropriation of the water.

But if the lands are not disposed of within that time, and the Indians do not acquire the fund, the appropriation of the water for their benefit will be useless, and they will lose the benefits of the appropriation of the water, and the so-called "irrigable" lands will be valueless.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Let me say to the gentleman that he labors under a misapprehension. The amendment suggested by the Indian Commissioner provided that the water appropriation should be held in trust for the full period of the patent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is twenty-five years.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. There was no time mentioned in it, but it appeared afterwards that it would be twenty-five years and would prevent the settlers from going in there with any feeling of security at all in making water appropriations during that full period of twenty-five years. I then went down to see the Acting Commissioner, Major Larrabee. Mr. Leupp was not here. We talked it over there in the Indian Office. Out of abundant precaution the Indian Committee put on five years more, and I will say to the gentleman that the provision has the approval of the Indian Office, as against the bill attached as a rider to the appropriation bill by the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have had experience of some gentlemen obtaining from some subordinate a recommendation while the Commissioner happened to be out of the city. I do not charge the gentleman with bad faith in this case, but I know of some pretty bad instances where recommendations like that have come in, and this House has assented to the recommendations, only to have the Commissioner protest afterwards against what was done.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I certainly do not want the gentleman from New York to apply that to the present conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, the Indians are given five years in which to make their applications and appropriate their water.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Five years after the reservation is opened, before any white man can come in with a prior appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. And under the laws of Montana the Indians would then have about five years to apply the water.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Five years ahead of any white man.

Mr. MONDELL. So that approximately the Indians have ten years—five years under their application and then five years under the laws of the State, a total of about ten years within which to irrigate the land and apply the water.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Easily that time.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that is a sufficient length of time, and that to delay longer would prevent the settlement of the lands which the Indians desire to dispose of, and therefore would not be in the interest of the Indians, and that it is well to have this limitation, and that this length of time is sufficiently long. It seems to me that three years would have been better.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Is it not true that it is to the advantage of the Indians rather than to their disadvantage that some definite time limit be placed during which they shall appropriate the water and initiate their rights?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Always.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Is it not a reservation in the interest of the Indians rather than adverse to them, to put on this limitation?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many acres of land are there in this reservation?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. About a million and a half. I want to say further that a delegation from these Indians were here in the winter, asking that it be done. Their petition was filed, and it is with the approbation of the Indians that the reservation is to be opened.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to express my dissent from the passage of these bills opening reservations in this way. In a service of six years on the Committee on Indian Affairs I had some experience with the opening of Indian reservations, and most of the members of that committee will agree that it is a very unusual thing to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill when it is impossible to obtain a copy of the report from the committee or of the report made by the Department upon the bill. It is possible to get a copy of the bill as introduced, but not as now offered to the House for passage.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The amendments were those suggested by the Indian Office.

Mr. MANN. We ought to be able to see them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Members of the House are entitled at least to have an opportunity to read the amendments suggested by the committee and to read recommendations made by the Indian Office. An Indian bill passed this House this session upon the assumption that it had the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That bill went to the President. It was brought back here. I protested against the manner in which the bill came back from the President, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs called upon me and said that he not only had disapproved the bill, but that he had personally gone to the President and protested against its becoming a law in the form in which it was. The President referred the bill back to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he called attention to certain objectionable provisions, and then the friends of the measure had a resolution passed here bringing the bill back from the President. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in my opinion, desires to do his duty and should be sustained by the House. Before we legislate to open any more Indian reservations the House ought to have a chance to read what the Commissioner has to say about the bills.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. He drew the bill himself.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that copies of these bills are in very great demand all over the country? When it is ascertained by persons wanting homes that there are to be certain reservations opened they write to Representatives and Senators here and get copies of the bill, and that is the reason why copies are not available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill is not available for the simple reason that it has not been printed in the form in which the House is asked to pass it, and not because demand has been made for copies of it outside. There is a great demand in my opinion among people who desire to acquire these lands to get them upon terms very favorable to themselves and without regard to the rights of the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How can they get them on terms favorable to themselves when they are thrown open to actual bidders in 160-acre lots?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the provisions of these bills these lands are obtained upon favorable conditions. The gentleman himself secured the passage of a bill here, supposedly approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the President refused to sign it, and subsequently the minimum price at which the lands were to be sold was raised, I believe, from $1.25 an acre to $5 an acre. It is against legislation of that character that I desire to guard.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that the Secretary of the Interior rarely recommends the passage of any Indian reservation opening bill, for the very good reason, as I understand it, from his point of view, that he does not desire to lose any power granted to him by holding these lands in his Department, so that, in my opinion, they can be exploited by the numerous agents whom he has under him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment. The gentleman can get his time from the gentleman from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. I wish to use my own time. I will say that in my experience and recollection, in a service of six years upon the Indian Committee, the only bill opening an Indian reservation, as I recall, that passed without the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, was the bill which the gentleman himself secured the passage of, which afterwards came back from the President. Now, as one Member of this House—I do not know that there are many who feel the same way as I do about these bills—I want to see in print the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on these bills opening Indian reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood I was using my own time. I do not wish to use the gentleman's time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from New York has ever been on an Indian reservation or ever been west of the Mississippi River?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; I was on one reservation where the white people—mostly from the gentleman's own Congressional district—had $500,000 worth of claims against the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What reservation was that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The reservation of the Osage Indians, who were farthest from civilization of any tribe in the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That shows how little the gentleman knows about the geography of this country. The Osage Reservation was not within 500 miles of my district.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say it was the gentleman's own constituents, and I repeat it, who had gone in there and, as the gentleman from Oklahoma knows, had $500,000 worth of claims against these Osage Indians that Congress had to legislate to have paid, and paid with a pretty high interest, if you want to call it that, to put them out of the way. I was on that reservation, and I was on some other reservations, and I have some slight knowledge of the subject.

These Indians happened to be the wealthiest people in the United States, worth, approximately, $10,000 apiece. The gentleman's constituents were in a fair way to have obtained all the wealth if they had been permitted to continue.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I have no constituents there and never had.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining—how much have I used and how much has the gentleman from Montana?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana has eight minutes remaining; the gentleman from New York has used nine minutes of the gentleman's time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will use three or four minutes stating my position to the House, and then the House can do as it pleases about the bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MARSHALL. The gentleman has referred to certain bills in which the price of the Indian lands had to be raised in order to meet the views of the President. He says it was raised from $1.25 to $4 or $5 an acre.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five dollars an acre.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have known of one or two instances of that kind, and nearly all the lands are liable to be in the hands of the Indians at the expiration of five years, when they will be thrown on the market and sold for a song. I think it was a mistake to raise the price.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will leave that to be settled between the gentleman and the President of the United States and the Commissioner on Indian Affairs. I believe that the President acted wisely. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the present status of this bill. It comes here with no Member able to get a copy of the report of the committee, unable to get a copy of the recommendations of any of the officials of the Indian Office, neither from the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and no Member is able even to get a copy of the bill in the form in which the House is asked to pass it. It may be immaterial to other Members of the House that we are opening 1,500,000 acres of land, some of it containing very valuable timber, some mineral, some agricultural land that is to be classified as of the first and second class, and doing it without any information, but it is of some importance to me. The Indian Office originally recommended that the water be appropriated for the Indians for the life of their patents—twenty-five years. This land, to be of any value, must be irrigated, and yet there is a limitation of eight years fixed in the bill upon somebody else's suggestion. It was not done in the interest of the Indian, not in the interest of the Government, but in the interest of the settlers who have their eyes upon this reservation and desire to get the lands with the water rights. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I will protest and vote against the passage of bills of this character unless I am able to obtain some definite and specific information about them.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Montana a question. The gentleman from New York would not yield to me. How is it the bill is here without having been reported?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The report lies on the Clerk's desk. The bill was introduced in the Senate early in the session and was put on as a rider or amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. The bill was drawn, I will say to the gentleman from New York, originally by Commissioner Leupp. The gentleman from New York has made his speech without knowing what the conditions surrounding the bill were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I am unable to find out and is the reason of my objection.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The gentleman, instead of letting me explain it to him, goes into a long exegesis of what has passed in regard to other bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Montana some more questions. I do not want to vote blind either for or against an Indian.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. As I say, this was introduced early in the session, and passed the Senate, but was attached as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. The House conferees refused to accept it, because that kind of legislation prevented the House from taking any part in it and prevented the House committee from having any say so on the legislation whatever. When the conferees refused to agree to it, I introduced the bill—practically the same bill over again—in the House, had it referred to the Indian Office, had a consultation with the Acting Commissioner, and the amendments that were read here to the bill were the amendments proposed by the Indian Office, as amended by the Committee on Indian Affairs this morning.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I am trying to get some questions answered which the gentleman from New York did not answer. These amendments were suggested by whom?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. By the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Larrabie, through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the committee approve the amendments?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Unanimously, and reported it back here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When did the committee do that?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. This morning. Unfortunately there was not a quorum of the committee present last Thursday, when we could have reported it and had it printed; but there was a quorum this morning, and we had a unanimous report.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the bill was approved by the committee this morning?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Unanimously.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How did it get to the Speaker so quickly?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Because it was reported this morning, and I offered it under suspension of the rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it is quite fair to the Indians and to the American people, and quite fair to Congress, to bring in a bill so quickly as that to the Speaker—bringing it in for consideration before it is printed?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The bill has been printed for over four months.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that; but the gentleman from New York, who is an expert on Indian depredations——

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Now, let me explain.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is complaining that a man of his information is at a loss to know, except to vote "no," which I am going to do unless I find out something more about this; he is complaining about not having the bill and amendments to examine, so that all can read——

Mr. DIXON of Montana. How in the name of common sense could they be printed in two hours?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, you could simply wait until to-morrow.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. To-morrow is not suspension day, and this is probably the last day of the session on which we could get the bill before the House. Ten thousand men from counties surrounding this reservation went into Canada across the boundary line last year and have taken up Canadian land, leaving land in the United States——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, do they want to come back and take up this land which we do not know anything about?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. A committee of Blackfeet Indians came here this winter and asked that this bill be passed. I went with them to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and together we prepared the bill which is before you to vote on. The Indians of the Blackfoot Reservation have asked——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Even if your bill has absolute merit, you certainly ought to give us a chance to read the report on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to know whose time is being consumed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We are consuming our own time in trying to take care of the Indians, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I refuse to yield any more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am very much obliged for the information you have given.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I want to say in good faith to this House that the amendments which are put in this bill are amendments from the Indian Office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. That the gentleman may ask a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said the bill was originally drawn by the Indian Office.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. It was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then he took the bill to the Assistant Commissioner, and he suggested these amendments. Which should we pass, the bill as drawn by the Commissioner, or pass the bill with these amendments drawn in his absence?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. All right; the bill as introduced in the Senate was first drawn by Commissioner Leupp. The Senate left out some provisions the Commissioner asked for. The bill I introduced in the House—I took a copy of the Senate bill—contains the original suggestions of the Indian Office and are now incorporated in that bill after full consideration and unanimous vote by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I noticed when the Clerk was reading the bill that a very large portion of it was pasted in the bill. It looked to me very queer that the Clerk should be reading a bill that was pasted up. I take it that the House has the right to have a bill printed for information, at least as a general rule, before the House is called upon to vote upon it. A Member of Congress can not possibly consider the bills which are introduced before they are reported into the House. This bill is numbered 19681. Members of Congress have a right to suppose that they will have an opportunity to examine a bill after it is reported into the House and put in print before they are called upon to vote upon it. Now, I have a high regard for the Committee on Indian Affairs, and yet I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to turn over to the Committee on Indian Affairs all of my judgment in reference to bills coming from that committee. The gentleman suggests that this bill was drawn last winter. It was introduced on May 25——

Mr. DIXON of Montana. In the Senate, I said——

Mr. MANN. Oh, well; if the bill was drawn last winter the gentleman ought to have introduced it in the House last winter; but, anyway, it is the gentleman's negligence and not ours that the bill was not before the House before, if there be any negligence in the case. We are not supposed to follow the proceedings in the Senate. Members of the House have a right to wait until bills are introduced in the House, and then they have the right further to wait until they have been acted upon by a committee and put in print. Now, I do not know whether any opportunity has been presented to examine the bill.

I have endeavored in the past to keep somewhat the track of these bills opening Indian reservations. Every one of them to me comes with a grain of suspicion. I understand the difficulties in reference to opening these lands to settlement to actual settlers. We endeavor to provide for it, and yet only last summer when out West I heard gentleman after gentleman talking about "beating the law" to obtain lands for settlement, even where they are drawing lots and selling their rights. When I came back I wrote to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and asked him how it happened these men were endeavoring to beat the law. The reply that came was very simple—that they are doing it; which, I understand, is continued by the people of the West to a very large extent.

Now, with great respect for them, I think it is the duty of the Government properly to safeguard the lands of these Indians fully in the interests of the Indians and also in the interest of the actual settlers. I do not know what is in this bill. It is impossible to tell by hearing the bill read at the Clerk's desk. There is no opportunity given to examine the bill. It was introduced on May 25, reported to the House this morning after 12 o'clock. I think the gentleman ought to be willing to let the bill lie over and receive a fair degree of attention from Members of the House. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 154, noes 13.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Jason, Edward Smith, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Sulphur River, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a concurrent resolution providing for printing certain volumes of land and pension decisions of his Department—to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16785) giving preference right to actual settlers on pasture reserve No. 3 to purchase land leased to them for agricultural purposes, in Comanche County, Okla., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4675); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3638) providing for the retirement of noncommissioned officers, petty officers, and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4676); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents the memorial of H. R. Fuller, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, remonstrating against the adoption of that part of the report of the committee of conference on the railroad rate bill which prevents the issuance by common carriers of passes to railroad employees and their families.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the memorial be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the memorial.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will add to the request of the Senator from Montana the request that the memorial be printed as a document.

The Secretary read the memorial, as follows:

H. R. FULLER,
206 Delaware avenue NE., Washington, D. C., June 4, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am authorized on behalf of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, representing in all 230,000 railroad employees of the United States, to respectfully protest against the adoption of that part of the report of the committee of conference on the railroad rate bill (H. R. 12987) which prevents the issuance by common carriers of passes to railroad employees and their families.

In view of the absolute necessity to at times deadhead men over various parts of the road, the passage of such a law would greatly impede the operation of a railroad, to say nothing of the extra expense, inconvenience, and hardship it would impose upon the employees.

There are many cases where the runs of train and engine men terminate at other than their home stations. This is especially true as regards local, way-freight, and work-train runs, and it is now the practice of many roads to issue free transportation to these men in order that they may spend their nights and Sundays at home. The passage of the provision in question would require these men to spend their nights and Sundays away from home, for the reason that they could not afford to pay transportation back and forth.

It is also a fact that a very large number of the shop and office forces of many railroads whose headquarters are in the large cities of necessity live in suburban towns along the road, and they are given free transportation back and forth to their work.

It is also true that a large number of crippled employees are receiving passes under agreements with the roads as a condition of their settlement, and for Congress to now declare these contracts void would not only be a lack of humane consideration for these men, many of whom have been distressingly injured in what is regarded as a public service, but it would also be legally wrong.

As to the families of employees: The contractual relations now existing between many roads and their men provide in certain cases for transportation for employees, their families, and household goods. This is regarded as a consideration or a part of the compensation for the services performed.

The passage of this provision would in some cases prevent the wife or family of an injured employee from reaching his bedside because of their lack of means of transportation.

That Congress will pass such a law after knowing its effect we can not believe.

Respectfully submitted.

H. R. FULLER,
Legislative Representative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will lie on the table. Is there objection to printing it as a document?

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of the order of business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine object to printing the memorial as a document?

Mr. HALE. Not at all. I want to make a statement while the Senate is full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. At the end of the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and in order that Senators may see how the business of the Senate stands I take this occasion to give a list of the appropriation bills which have not yet been touched by the Senate:

The naval appropriation bill, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the great sundry civil appropriation bill (carrying nearly $100,000,000), the general deficiency appropriation bill, and the public-building bill—six appropriation bills that have as yet been untouched by the Senate as a body. I wish Senators to appreciate the importance of action on appropriation bills, if we are to adjourn, as I think everyone here desires that we shall during this month. There are after to-day only twenty-two working days in the month.

It being so important that these bills should be passed here and sent to the House for consideration, I hope the Senate will this morning, at the end of the routine morning business, take up the naval appropriation bill rather than either of the conference reports. I do not belittle the importance of the conference reports and the interest that the public has in them, but a conference report is already in its last stages; it can come up at any time and can not take much time between the two Houses. The appropriation bills, as I have indicated, are entirely different.

We are all interested, if we are to get through in the twenty-two working days, that the appropriation bills shall as fast as they are ready be acted upon here and sent over to the House for its action, so that the general business may be expedited and we may be enabled to adjourn finally in the very last days of this month. I do not hope that we can do it before.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I should hope that instead of taking up any conference report at the end of the routine morning business, the Senate will, from these considerations which I have presented, and which all are as much interested in as I am, go on with the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I see no reason, unless there should be some discussion and opposition to the conference report on the rate bill, why it might not be disposed of in the morning hour. Has the Senator from Maine any assurance that if the conference reports are allowed to go over the naval appropriation bill will not lead to some discussion?

Mr. HALE. I do not think the naval appropriation bill, while a very important bill, and a large bill, will lead to much discussion. The committee, in its action, has robbed it of almost, if not all, of the contested items, and I do not expect that it will take very much time.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think there are one or two items in the naval appropriation bill that will excite some discussion and opposition.

Mr. HALE. There will undoubtedly be some discussion upon it. On the other hand, both the conference report on the rate bill and the conference report on the statehood bill will give rise to very considerable discussion. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maine, who is on the Appropriations Committee and will realize the necessity of it, that the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported the bill pertaining to the school question here in the District. It has passed the House. I understand the Committee on Appropriations are anxious to have the bill disposed of so that the District of Columbia appropriation bill can be properly considered. The Committee on the District of Columbia is ready to take up the bill this morning. I do not think it will take a very long time, and inasmuch as the bill will have to go back to be considered by the House and will probably have to go into conference, it seems to me that we ought to take up that bill this morning and get it in shape for the Committee on Appropriations to act on the matter.

Mr. HALE. Half a dozen Senators have important measures which they have in charge, and which they think ought to pass. I have no doubt that they ought to be passed; but I do not think anything is so pressing as to take up the naval appropriation bill and get that out of the way. If the Senator can get his measure in before the District of Columbia appropriation bill comes up, that is another matter.

The whole matter, Mr. President, is with the Senate. If the Senate does not desire to take up first the naval appropriation bill—which is ready and which would have been taken up yesterday, but Senators know why it was that no business could be done, and the days are passing—the matter is entirely in the hands of the Senate. I shall, if the Chair recognizes me, move at the termination of the routine morning business, to take up the naval appropriation bill. That is the only thing that I can do. The whole thing rests with the Senate. I thought it advisable to state just what the condition of public business is. I leave it with the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Senator give us any idea how much time the naval appropriation bill will consume?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I suggest that we ought to have some morning business transacted.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the transaction of morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama calls for the regular order. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Dunbar Lodge, No. 142, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Meadville, Pa., and of New York City Division, No. 54, Order of Railway Conductors, remonstrating against the passage of the antipass amendment to the railroad rate bill to prohibit the issuance of passes to railroad employees and their families; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I present for the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate, memorials of sundry railroad employees of Jackson, Gladstone, Escanaba, Owosso, and Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the so-called "railroad rate bill" to prohibit the issuance of passes to railroad employees and their families. I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICK presented memorials of sundry citizens of Lorain, Columbus, Lima, Zanesville, Alliance, Youngstown, Bellevue, Toledo, Cleveland, Kent, Conneaut, Chicago Junction, Springfield, Galion, Nelsonville, Akron, Cincinnati, Newark Depot, Chillicothe, Crestline, Massillon, Middleport, and Steubenville, all in the State of Ohio; of Indianapolis, Ind.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Canandaigua, N. Y., and New York City, N. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I simply wish to state that a snow of telegrams has been coming to me, and I see, from indications at the desk, to other Senators, protesting against the drastic provision of the conference report prohibiting passes on railroads for their own employees. Mr. MONEY. Mr. BACON. I presume every Senator has received telegrams such as have been presented by a large number of Senators. I will simply ask that there may be unanimous consent that Senators may present these telegrams at the desk without having permission in each instance to do so. I have myself a large number to which I will give that disposition if permitted by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, under the rule which we adopted a week ago, every one of these telegrams can be filed with the Secretary and put into the RECORD, and the very object which every Senator has of giving publicity to the fact that he has received them and presented them will be accomplished in that way. We are losing some valuable time. I have not presented the numerous ones that came to me, because I expect to follow that course. After the avalanche began I did not feel willing to cut off those who felt constrained to adopt this method.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not insist upon the rule being followed, for that would suppress all knowledge of the popularity of this measure.

Mr. TILLMAN. So far as the popularity of it is concerned, it seems that there is a streak of yellow in the Senate rather than a streak of white this morning, and there must be a good many franks somewhere to send so many telegrams on this subject.

But without regard to that, and without defending the measure at all, because I am only in a manner responsible for it and am willing to bear the burden of the responsibility, I call attention to the fact that this provision does not go into effect until January next, and it does not obtain inside of a State; it governs only interstate traffic.

There is great hysteria—if I may so call it—in regard to this matter. I only hope Senators who are so anxious about relieving the employees—and I myself have always been willing to vote to give them free transportation—will not inundate us with requests for additional exceptions when we have this matter up again. That is the trouble now. It was because nearly every Senator here felt constrained the other day to offer an amendment enlarging the circle of exemptions until it practically covered all creation. We had to deal with it somehow in conference, and I preferred the proposed amendment rather than to do nothing, knowing that the Senate, in its own good time, and the House could next winter deliberately prepare some sane and reasonable and proper and just method for the control of this evil and adopt it in time to prevent any harm.

Mr. President, I believe conference reports are privileged, and I will ask that the conference report on the rate bill be laid before the Senate. I wish to make an explanation of the report.

Mr. MONEY. Before the Senator proceeds to that I hope, in view of the fact that he has mentioned that there were a good many franks around, he will allow me to say that every dispatch I have presented was paid.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I insist on the regular order, and that is the presentation of petitions.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to cut off Senators from presenting petitions.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not. A conference report is not privileged now.

Mr. CULLOM. I hold in my hand a large number of dispatches on the rate question and the pass question. Most of them protest against the proposed interference with passes to employees of railroads and their families. This bunch of telegrams I have received since I came into the Senate a few minutes ago. I have a great number in my committee room and a good many at my house. I present these and ask that they be noted in the RECORD.

The telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be noted in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAIN INSPECTION.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask leave to file and to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the railroad and warehouse commission of Minnesota, in answer to the speech of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT IN ANSWER TO THE CHARGES MADE BY SENATOR MCCUMBER, IN HIS SPEECH IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE, MAY 25, 1906.

There seem to be five distinct charges made by the Senator:

First. That the chief inspector is appointed in the interests of the elevators; that he appoints his deputies, and that appeals go from the deputies to the chief inspector, and are almost uniformly affirmed.

Second. That there is a large increase in the amount of grain shipped out to the amount weighed in. It is charged that in ten years the average was 26,000,000 bushels.

Third. That there was an excessive dockage.

Fourth. That a cargo of wheat known as "durum," "macaroni," or "rice" wheat was overgraded when it was shipped to a Mediterranean port. This charge is based upon a letter of H. T. Fowler, of the Alger-Fowler Company, of Superior, Wis.

Fifth. That a larger number of bushels of the higher grades is shipped out than is taken in.

The Senator is misinformed in regard to the manner of the appointment of the chief inspector and the machinery provided in this State for taking appeals.

The chief inspector is appointed by the railroad and warehouse commission, which, by law, has general supervision over the grain business in the State. He appoints his deputies with the approval of the commission. The grain-inspection force consists of a chief inspector, two chief deputy inspectors—one located at Minneapolis and the other at Duluth—and the business at these two terminal points is under the immediate control of the chief deputies located there, subject to the daily supervision of the chief inspector. There are two assistants, known as first and second assistants, at each point, and sufficient deputy and subdeputy inspectors at each terminal who, in the first instance, do the actual work of inspecting the grain.

Until within about a year ago the grain came into the railroad yards at Duluth, Superior, Wis., and Minneapolis. The deputy inspectors assigned to the different yards went to the cars, the helpers opened them, and the deputy inspectors made the inspection; this was done by the helper plunging each car a sufficient number of times, not less than three, with a sectional probe or trier, which brings to the surface a sample of the wheat from the top to the bottom of the car. These samples are all mixed together, and from the same thus obtained the grade is determined. The inspector is not informed from where the wheat comes, nor to whom it belongs, nor to what commission house it is shipped. The inspector has with him a sieve and testing kettle for the purpose of determining the weight of the wheat, and also to determine the amount of dockage, foul seed, etc., contained in the wheat. If in the judgment of the inspector the dockage is more than a pound and a half per bushel it is arrived at by careful test with scale and sieve.

Since the Wisconsin authorities have requested us to withdraw our inspection from Superior the inspection has been done at Cass Lake and Sandstone on the line of the Great Northern Railway; the samples have been gathered there by probing in the same manner as described heretofore, but have been sent to Duluth, and the inspection has actually been made by the inspectors at the office of the chief deputy inspector in Duluth.

The owner of the wheat always has a representative at the terminal point. Wheat is shipped to the terminal point either in care of the elevator owning it or to the commission merchant handling it, so the owner of all wheat has a representative to look after his interests. If the owner is not satisfied with the grade placed on the grain by the deputy inspector he is entitled to call for a reinspection; if the grade is sustained, he pays $1 per car; if changed in any way, either dockage or grade, there is no charge. If he is dissatisfied with the reinspection, he still can appeal to what is known as the "board of grain appeals." This board is appointed by the governor, and is composed of three members in Duluth and three members in Minneapolis, not more than two of whom can belong to the same political party, and is separate and distinct from the inspection department; neither the chief inspector nor the railroad and warehouse commission has anything to say about the personnel of this board. The first board was appointed by Governor Lind in 1899, the second by Governor Van Sant in 1901, and the third by Governor Johnson in 1905. The grain is carefully examined by them, and when necessary sifted and tested for dockage the same as by the inspector and reinspector, and the grade placed by the appeal board upon this grain is final. The charge for an appeal is $1.

The grain inspectors are promoted by the chief inspector from the subordinate position of helper, and a man generally works from three to five years in the position of helper, whose business it is to go with the inspectors, open the car door, do the plunging, thus getting familiar with the different grades and varieties of grain, and only receives this promotion after a careful and rigid examination.

Exhibit A is a statement showing the number of cars reinspected and appealed, and the results of such reinspection and appeal from September 1, 1899, to September 1, 1905. The total number of cars inspected was 1,563,294; cars reinspected, 176,892; cars changed on reinspection, 82,279; cars sustained on reinspection, 94,613; cars appealed, 52,490; cars changed on appeal, 16,262; cars sustained on appeal, 36,228.

The second charge seems to be the most serious one made by Senator MCCUMBER, and to support this statement he relies principally upon the decision rendered by Judge Sanborn of the United States district court of Wisconsin (western district), in which the judge finds that the evidence in the case showed this discrepancy. Since that time, however, the judge has modified his findings as follows:

"What has been said in this opinion respecting changes of weight, dockage, and arbitrary changes of grades is borne out by the record as presented on these motions, nor was there upon the argument any substantial denial of the facts charged. It should be stated, however, that the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission, under whose jurisdiction these frauds are alleged to exist, is not a party to these proceedings, and has no right to appear in any way. Some things have been brought to my attention since the motions were decided which lead me to think that on final hearing the facts may turn out to be different from what they appear to be as shown in the record, and particularly that the 26,000,000 bushels shrinkage in ten years may turn out to be an exaggeration, if not a mistake. In view of the importance of the interests involved, and the fact that the Minnesota commission has not been and can not be heard, I have appended this memorandum to the opinion.

"MAY 26, 1906."

The Senator also relies upon some statements of figures compiled by Mr. F. R. Crumpton, of Superior, Wis., which are claimed to have been taken from the official records of the Duluth Board of Trade and from the reports of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission; and Mr. Crumpton is the only witness who testified to the fact that 26,000,000 bushels more had been shipped out than received in the action in which Judge Sanborn made his findings, and we submit herewith the affidavit of Mr. Crumpton, in which he states that he had made a mistake, and that the amount shipped out is substantially that that was taken in.

Exhibit B is a statement made from the reports of the weighmasters at Duluth and Superior from September 1, 1892, to August 31, 1902, inclusive, showing the amount of wheat weighed in to the elevators and mills, bushels weighed out of the elevators, the bushels weighed into the mills, and the bushels weighed into the Zenith elevator, which should be considered as shipments "out." There were shipped from the Zenith elevator 1,181,317 bushels, on which no different weight was taken, this elevator accepting the "in" weight from the parties to whom the wheat was sold. An examination of this statement will show that there was an equal amount of wheat shipped out and taken in.

The statement on which Mr. McCUMBER relied did not contain the amount of wheat received into the mills for the years ending 1893, 1894, and 1895, which was 30,686,632 bushels. Mr. Crumpton's affidavit fully explains this.

Exhibit C is a statement showing the average amount of dockage per bushel for each year from 1893 to 1902, inclusive, and shows an average dockage for the ten years of 19⅛ ounces to the bushel.

The Senator also stated that there was dockage on wheat received in, and no dockage on the wheat shipped out. This is explained by the fact that the grain going out from Duluth in cargoes is all cleaned before it is shipped, and practically all the wheat that goes from that market goes in cargoes over the Lakes.

The charge of the overgrading of a cargo of durum wheat, made by Mr. H. T. Fowler: If this charge had been true, the Department would have heard of this overgrading at Buffalo, New York, or Montreal, whichever route the cargo took. The Commission have had some experience with Mr. H. T. Fowler, of Superior, Wis., who writes the letter making this charge.

All flax is inspected and the dockage determined by taking a sample from the cars to the office of the chief deputy inspector, which is done in the following manner:

The car is sampled by probe or trier passing through the seed at not less than seven points equally distributed through the car. At each point an equal quantity of seed is taken, aggregating 3 pounds, which is deemed an average sample of the carload. From this sample 1 pound of average seed is taken to be tested, and the impurity removed by sieves; the per cent of impurity and weight per measured bushel of the commercially pure seed determines the grade and dockage.

Reinspection and appeal is allowed from this the same as other grain.

When the sample has been taken from the car, for convenience it is hung on the door of the car, and subsequently, when the train of cars has been sampled, these samples are gathered up and taken to the office.

During December, 1903, the Department found that they were having complants in regard to excessive dockage on flax. An investigation was instituted, and it was found that this Mr. H. T. Fowler was tampering with these flax samples which had been hung on the car doors by taking some of the flax out of the bags and putting dirt and foul seed in the samples, and it was found that some of the samples with which Mr. Fowler had tampered showed an increase in the dockage of 100 per cent. After he had fixed the samples he would notify his commission man in Duluth of the numbers of the cars and request him to buy the flax, thereby practically obtaining a large amount of flax from each car.

The commission make this statement advisedly and are willing to stand by it in any forum where Mr. Fowler wishes to try it. We were advised by counsel in West Superior that for the offense committed we had no legal remedy, and we desire this statement to be made to the United States Senate for the purpose of showing to what length some people who are interested in discrediting the Minnesota inspection and weighing department will go and the character of witnesses they will employ.

We append copies of letters received from the chief deputy inspector at Duluth in regard to this matter. (Exhibits D and E.)

Regarding the fifth charge, wherein the Senator quotes from the report of the Hon. George A. Young and submits a table from the chief grain inspector's report showing receipts and shipments for the crop year ending August 31, 1901 (this table was included in his speech of March 30, 1904), he says: "More than three times the amount of 'No. 1 hard' was shipped out than was taken in; also, it will be seen that of the higher grades the amounts shipped out always exceed by two or three times the amounts taken in."

In regard to these charges, will state the annual report of the chief grain inspector does not take into account the amount of grain on hand in the elevators at the beginning or ending of each season; they only show the actual amount handled for the crop year. In this particular case there was on hand September 1, 1900, over 7,000,000 bushels of wheat in the public and private elevators, and I refer you to Exhibit F for a detailed statement of the actual amount on hand, received, and shipped.

Regarding the changes of grades in and out of elevators: In addition to the thorough explanation made by Senator NELSON, we submit the following:

The intermingling or mixing of different grades of grain, resulting in the improving of low grades to a higher grade, is considered by all grain men and handlers as legitimate a business as the improving or mixing of any article in any other line of business.

The grading of grain is largely a matter of judgment, and no rules for this can be laid down that do not allow a certain range for every grade of grain. On this account there is a higher and lower level in every grade, and by mixing certain proportions of the choice qualities of, we will say, 1 and 2 northern in the proportion of the low grade used can be raised so as to make a mixture equal or better than the average run of the higher grade.

Wheat that is put in the 2 northern grade may have all the qualities of 1 northern but one. For instance, it may contain too much cockle, smut, foul seed, etc.; it may be bleached a little too much, or it may be too light in weight, but by mixing with it 1 northern of good color that contains no cockle or bleached kernels, and is very heavy, it brings it up to the average level of the upper grade. To accomplish these results it is necessary to have elevators equipped with special machinery for the handling and improving this class of wheat.

There are two classes of elevators at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior—the public and the private. The public elevator affords the shipper the privilege of storing his grain where different grades are not allowed to be mixed. This class of elevator is entirely under the control of the State grain department. The private elevator is not under the control of the State, except by courtesy. They may be classed as grain merchants. They buy all grain which they store from owners or their representatives, by sample or grade, selecting only such as they, in their judgment, think can be improved by handling and mixing—wheat that is graded "No grade" on account of being too wet to store, unless handled and dried, or wheat that is tainted with smut, exceedingly dirty, bin burnt, or musty. This class of grain is thought by many persons not conversant with the grain business to be no good, in fact, worthless, while as a matter of fact it may be, if dried and carefully handled by brushing, fanning, and cleaning, entitled to the highest grade.

Prior to the inception of the private elevators at Duluth, with the exception of a very small quantity which was bought at that time by one or two small local flouring mills, all wheat graded below 2 northern (and even that grade could only be sold in limited quantity), had to find a market elsewhere. Shippers were notified not to ship their low grades to Duluth, but to Minneapolis or some other market where it could be disposed of at better advantage on account of the private elevators. That the mixing of wheat does not injure the producer, but, as a matter of fact, is a benefit, is well known to all conversant with the grain business. It enables mixers to pay a premium above the price of the regular grade for the choice lots or cars of each grade.

Different grades of grain can not be mixed in public elevators, but the law does not prevent an owner of grain from mixing different grades or different qualities in his own elevator, where he is not storing and handling grain for the public; and such a law, in the opinion of this commission, would be unconstitutional.

EXHIBIT D.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF CHIEF DEPUTY INSPECTOR OF GRAIN,
Duluth, Minn., December 3, 1903.

Mr. F. W. EVA,
Chief Inspector of Grain, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: We have had quite a number of complaints lately on our flax dockages, and on resamples have had to take as high as 4 per cent off of them. It has occurred on our best men and most careful samplers.

November 22 a resample was called on Great Northern car 33646 by Turle & Co., which originally graded 1–7½ per cent, on resample was made 1–3 per cent. They claim that was the dockage advised.

I thought there was a leakage somewhere, and had Mr. Graves watch the men that were sampling. On investigation he found that Mr. Fowler, of the firm of Alger-Fowler, of West Superior, who has been in the yard all fall looking at flax, was in the habit of going up the ladder and watching the men sample. It looked queer to him, so he had the men watch him very closely.

Yesterday he was seen tampering with a sample of Great Northern car 24552. Nothing was said, but after he left the yard a resample was taken and both brought to the office. The first sample tested 10 per cent; the second only 5 per cent. We found the car was consigned to Edwards-Wood & Co. We had them call a reinspection at Ross elevator, and the third sample tested 5 per cent.

I had Mr. Graves use extra precaution to-day. Knutson & Davis saw Fowler putting something into samples of 46206 and 21522. We had new samples taken, and there was a difference of 3 per cent on each car.

Fowler can only buy flax from McKindley & Nicholls, Turle & Co., and H. Poehler, of this side, and I understand he pays a half cent premium. The flax of these firms is all he looks at.

What would you advise? Shall I order him out of the yard, and notify these firms what he is doing, or can we have him arrested?

Hoping to hear from you soon,

Yours, truly, H. E. EMERSON, C. D. I.

EXHIBIT E.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF CHIEF DEPUTY INSPECTOR OF GRAIN,
Duluth, Minn., December 4, 1903.

Mr. F. W. EVA, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Staples came up this morning and I stated the Fowler case same as I wrote you last night. He feels the same as we do in prosecuting Fowler, but he says the commission have no jurisdiction and that the Duluth Board of Trade can do nothing in the matter, it having occurred in Wisconsin.

Mr. Ames, president of the board, came in while we were talking and wanted to know the facts of the Fowler case. We told him what we knew and also the evidence we had against Fowler. He called up John Murphy, attorney for the Great Northern Railway, and stated the evidence we had, and if we took affidavits of the men that had seen Fowler tampering with the samples, did he think there was a chance for criminal action? He told him to prepare them and have them ready for Monday morning. In the meantime he would look up the law on cases of that kind and he certainly would do all in his power to land Mr. Fowler where he belonged.

I have had all the boys that were concerned in this matter at the office this afternoon and have their statements. Shall go over them with Mr. Staples in the morning; will then have them typewritten and sworn to before a notary public.

It looks to me as though we had Mr. Fowler in just about the right place.

We had another experience with him to-day. Edwards-Wood had five cars of flax and he loaded four of them and one for McKindley & Nicholls; had two samples of them besides the one he fixed.

Have tried to keep this matter quiet, had cautioned the boys not to say anything, but the whole board of trade knew it this morning and also had a newspaper man up this afternoon. We held him down and there was nothing published to-night.

I heard the West Superior board were going to take the matter up, and if proven were going to expel him. Will keep you posted if anything new turns up.

Yours, truly, H. E. EMERSON.

CHANGING OF GRADES.

[Part of Mr. MCCUMBER'S speech in the Senate, March 30, 1904.]

In 1903 a committee of the North Dakota legislature, in conjunction with a committee from the Wisconsin legislature, sought by their combined efforts to find some source of relief. They were forced to fall back on Federal inspection and grain grading. This committee made a thorough investigation of the subject of wheat inspection and grading, and officialy found conditions about as I have mentioned. I quote from the report of Hon. George M. Young, a member of this committee:

"That such abuses exist is a matter of almost universal knowledge among our farmers, who have been systematically robbed; but in addition to the facts presented by our farmers, and in corroboration thereof, I call to your attention the official report of the chief inspector of grain of the State of Minnesota, showing the total receipts and shipments of grain for the year ending August 31, 1901, from which I quote."

Now, from this table alone, and from the official report that is given by the inspector there will be seen the robbery that is going on in the present system of State grain grading at the terminal markets at Duluth, Superior, and Minneapolis.

"No. 1 hard: Receipts, 341,567 bushels; shipments, 1,000,438 bushels."

More than three times as much No. 1 hard was shipped out in those three years as was taken in.

"No. 1 northern [that is a very good grade of grain]: Receipts, 10,070,414 bushels; shipments, 16,900,917 bushels.

"No. 2 northern: Recipts, 7,341,594; shipments, 3,978,311.

"No. 3 spring: Receipts, 1,335,830; shipments, 444,041."

It will be seen that of the higher grades the amount shipped out always exceeds by two or three times the amount taken in, while of the lower grades the amount taken in exceeds from two to three times the amount shipped out.

I will make this table a part of my remarks without quoting further from it.

The table referred to is as follows:

No. 1 hard: Receipts, 341,567; shipments, 1,000,438.
No. 1 northern: Receipts, 10,070,414; shipments, 16,900,917.
No. 2 northern: Receipts, 7,341,594; shipments, 3,978,311.
No. 3 spring: Receipts, 1,335,830; shipments, 444,041.
Rejected: Receipts, 256,063; shipments, 134,471.
No grade: Receipts, 1,335,521; shipments, 344,823.
NOTE.—See attached copy, Exhibit F, for answer to this:
No. 1 hard on hand and receipts, 1,004,203 bushels.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of St. Louis, ss:

Frank R. Crumpton, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is now, and has been for sixteen years last past, continuously

[a] Owing to the late spring frosts, the weeds got the start of wheat, resulting in a more than ordinarily foul crop, particularly in the central and northern sections. The net average dockage was between 9 and 10 ounces to the bushel in excess of the average of former years.

a resident of the city of Superior, in the State of Wisconsin, and has been during all of said period engaged in the business of buying and selling grain.

That affiant is the same Frank R. Crumpton who was a witness in the case of Gregory, Cook & Co. v. Wisconsin Grain Commission, which was tried before Judge Parish, in Superior, Wis., on or about March 22, 1906, in which case affiant gave testimony under oath as to a computation made by affiant as to the amount of wheat received and shipped by the elevators located upon Duluth-Superior harbor during the ten years from September 1, 1892, to September 1, 1902, and from which computation it appeared that 26,014,000 bushels of wheat had been reported shipped and manufactured into flour, more than the amount reported as having been received by said elevators during the same period of time.

That affiant is the same Frank R. Crumpton who, at the sessions of the Wisconsin legislature in the winter of 1902 and 1903, used said computation in arguments and conversations with members of the Wisconsin legislature in support of a bill then pending in said legislature providing for the establishment of a Wisconsin grain inspection commission, and that, so far as affiant knows, affiant is the only person who has ever made or used or testified to such a shortage of grain, either before said legislature since the year 1902 or in any pending case in the State of Wisconsin.

That the computation originally made by affiant and used by him in testifying in the case aforesaid and with the members of said legislature is correctly shown by the tabulated statement, hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A." and made a part hereof.

That immediately after affiant gave his testimony in said case of Gregory, Cook & Co. v. Wisconsin Grain Commission on March 22, 1906, affiant's attention was called to certain errors and inaccuracies in his original computation, and thereupon affiant, before the close of said case, in open court, called the attention of the presiding judge to the fact that in some respects said computation was not correct.

That since said time affiant has examined into said matter more carefully and has made use of all available statistics and reports as to the amount of wheat received, shipped, and made into flour between September 1, 1892, and September 1, 1902, at the port of Duluth-Superior, and now knows that the original computation made by affiant, and hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A," was not a true or correct statement as to the facts in many respects, though at the time that affiant made said statements affiant believed them to be true.

That affiant now knows that in his original computation, marked "Exhibit A," hereto attached, affiant failed to take into account the following items relating to such receipts and shipments of grain, to wit: (1) A clerical error in the original computation increasing the apparent excess of shipments over receipts by 1,000,000 bushels; (2) the stock of wheat in store in elevators on September 1, 1892, amounting to 1,554,000 bushels; (3) the stock of wheat in store September 1, 1902, amounting to 360,000 bushels; (4) the amount of wheat received by elevators on Duluth-Superior harbor, and subsequently shipped out by said elevators to flour mills located at Duluth and Superior, between September 1, 1892, and September 1, 1895, amounting to 30,686,000 bushels; (5) the amount of correction that should be made in the number of bushels of wheat used in the production of flour in said period of time on account of the use in said original statement "Exhibit A" of calendar years instead of crop years, amounting to 905,000 bushels; (6) the amount of allowance that should be made in said "Exhibit A," but not therein taken into account, for tare on account of dirt, foul seed, etc., on 224,216,000 bushels of wheat reported as having been received by the Minnesota State Weighing Department as gross bushels, amounting to 4,671,000 bushels; (7) the amount of allowance that should be made in said statement for transfers of grain between elevators of the same system.

That affiant has prepared a statement, which is hereto attached and marked "Exhibit B," which shows correctly in bushels, no account being made of fractions of a thousand bushels in the final computation, the allowance that should be made in said original statement—"Exhibit A"—on account of the various items hereinabove enumerated, which were not taken into account in said original statement "Exhibit A," and has tabulated said items in the form of a debit and credit statement for the purpose of striking a balance upon said statement as a supplement to the original statement "Exhibit A." hereto attached, and for the purpose of explaining the apparent discrepancy of about 26,000,000 bushels shown by said "Exhibit A."

That after a careful and painstaking examination, which affiant has made of said matter, affiant is now convinced that during the period from September 1, 1892, to September 1, 1902, there was no excess of shipments of grain from the elevators at the head of Lake Superior over receipts of grain by said elevators, including stocks in storage at the commencement and end of said period, as charged by affiant before said legislature and in the testimony in said case of Gregory, Cook & Co. v. Wisconsin Grain Commission and in private conversations and correspondence, and that in all such statements and correspondence affiant now finds that he was misinformed and makes this affidavit for the purpose of correcting such misstatements and of showing the true facts.

FRANK R. CRUMPTON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of May, A. D. 1906.

Notary Public, St. Louis County, Minn.

EXHIBIT A.—Frank R. Crumpton's original statement.

	Bushels received.	Bushels shipped.
1. Receipts as per State grain weighing department's figures from Sept. 1, 1892, to Sept. 1, 1902	463,506,000
2. Shipped as per State grain weighing department's figures from Sept. 1, 1892, to Sept. 1, 1902		395,483,000
3. 20,897,070 barrels of flour manufactured from Jan. 1, 1893, to Jan. 1, 1903, as per figures of the Duluth Board of Trade, reduced to bushels by the multiple of 4.5		94,037,000
4. "Shipped and manufactured into flour more than reported as being received"	26,014,000
Total	489,520,000	489,520,000

EXHIBIT B.—Frank R. Crumpton's supplemental statement.

	Bushels received.	Bushels shipped.
1. Exhibit A shows excess of shipments over receipts of		26,014,000
2. Exhibit A (1), original statement, contains clerical error in addition of		1,000,000
3. Exhibit A does not show stock in store of wheat on Sept. 1, 1892, of	1,554,000
4. Exhibit A does not show stock of wheat in store on Sept. 1, 1902, of		360,000
5. Exhibit A (1) does not take into account the amount of wheat received by mills from Sept. 1, 1892, to Sept. 1, 1895, of	30,686,000
6. Exhibit A (3) shows the flour production for the 10 calendar years ending Dec. 31, 1902. Should be for the 10 crop years ending Sept. 1, 1902, or a reduction in the production of 201,000 barrels, and using the multiple 4.5 equal to	905,000
7. Exhibit A does not allow for any dockage or tare on account of dirt, foul seed, etc., on 224,000,000 bushels reported received by the State grain weighing department as gross bushels. Figured at an average tare or dockage of 1¼ pounds per bushel this would amount to		4,671,000
8. Apparent excess of receipts over shipments of		1,092,000
Explained by the fact that on transfers between elevators of a system weighing in only has been charged during the last few years, and thus duplicating the receipts that amount.

I hereby certify that the foregoing statements and affidavit are true copies of the original on file in the office of secretary Duluth Board of Trade.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6338) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington," to report it without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It merely enables the Episcopal Church of the District of Columbia to invest some of their funds in real estate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, perhaps I am not sufficiently familiar with the religious vernacular, but to incorporate a "convention" seems to me on its face a rather extraordinary proceeding. I take it for granted that "convention," as used in the bill, does not mean a convention in its ordinary sense. I would like to know of the Senator who has charge of the bill if the convention as described in the bill includes more than the relations of that church in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. It is evident this bill will give rise to discussion, and I must ask that it go to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go to the Calendar.

POLLARD & WALLACE.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6299) for the relief of Pollard & Wallace, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like very much to have the bill considered at this time. It is a brief bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the firm of Pollard & Wallace, of Champaign, Ill., $6,000, being the value of the plant leased by them to the Government and used by the War Department in the construction of a lock and dam and construction work in the Osage River, near Osage City, Mo., and still retained by the War Department for use in conjunction with the work on the dam, but rendered useless to Pollard & Wallace by reason of the failure of the War Department to complete the work by lack of proper appropriation therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT ACTS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. KITTREDGE on the 2d instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, in conjunction with the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives, all matters pertaining to the copyright laws, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings; and that the committee be authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, and to have such hearings printed, and that all expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 6362) to approve, ratify, and confirm tariff duties levied and collected at all ports and places in the Philippine Islands between July 12, 1898, and March 8, 1902, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER. Ordinarily the bill should go to the Committee on the Philippines; but it involves a question of law, and I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. The bill strictly should go to the Committee on the Philippines. It relates to a question which has grown out of the bill reported from that committee; but it involves wholly a legal question, and I think it will expedite the legislation to send it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WEIGHING, INSPECTION, ETC., OF GRAIN.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there were some remarks made a few days ago, when the agricultural appropriation bill was before the Senate, concerning the method of handling, dealing with, inspecting, and grading of grain at the terminals of Duluth, Superior, and Minneapolis. Some exception was taken by the Minnesota grain and warehouse commission, as I believe it is called, to the deductions which were made from my remarks and also from the opinion of Judge Sanborn, and that commission indicated a desire to have an investigation of the matter. For that purpose, I introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the joint resolution read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 64) directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate the matter of grain weighing, inspecting, grading, dockage, and mixing of grain at certain cities, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to examine into and fully investigate the matter of weighing, inspecting, grading, dockage, and mixing of wheat, flax, barley, oats, corn, rye, and other cereals, and all matters pertaining to the buying, selling, handling, and exporting of same at the cities of Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, Buffalo, New York, and such other places as may be necessary, for the purpose of ascertaining what, if any, irregularities, injustices, or defects exist or result, or have heretofore existed or resulted, to the producer of such cereals or other persons dealing in the same, from the system employed at such places, in such weighing, inspecting, grading, dockage, or mixing, or any other matter pertaining to the buying, selling, handling, transporting, or exporting such cereals; also the effect of such system upon our commerce in grains, both domestic and foreign, and report the result of such investigation, together with recommendations, to Congress on or before December 15, 1906. Such investigation shall cover a period of at least ten years previous to the enactment of this resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon in the District of Columbia, to be used by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture as a laboratory for experiments in the seasoning and preservative treatment of construction and other timbers, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,400 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Joseph Williams for stores and supplies furnished to the United States military at Fredericksburg, Va., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 to pay Henry W. Lee, out of the funds of the Winnebago Indians of Wisconsin, the amount found due him by the Court of Claims for services rendered these Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $175,000 for the construction of an able seagoing tug for the Revenue-Cutter Service, at New Bedford, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ELEVATOR, GRAIN BUYING, AND FORWARDING BUSINESS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Whereas certain corporations and individuals engaged in the buying, storing, forwarding, and selling of grain receive from the railroad companies over the lines of which they operate special privileges in the form of rebates, discrimination in the matter of furnishing cars, side track and elevator privileges; and

Whereas it appears that the directors of some of the grain-carrying roads are also heavily interested in the elevator companies which enjoy these special privileges; and

Whereas the granting of these special privileges has resulted in a monopolization of this business and in forcing independent dealers out of business, and in forcing the farmers to sell grain at less than a fair price: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President request the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a thorough investigation of the elevator and grain buying and forwarding business of this country, to determine to what extent these special favors have been granted, the influence which the monopolizing of this branch of business has had upon the market, the injury it has worked to the grain producers, the extent to which the railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees own or control the grain buying and grain forwarding companies, and the manner in which these railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees secured their holdings in these grain buying, storing, and forwarding companies, and to report the same to the Congress at its next session; and, be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of conducting this investigation, the Interstate Commerce Commission is empowered to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and compel the production of all books, papers, contracts, and such other documents or memoranda which it deems necessary to the making of a full and complete investigation. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expense of such investigation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the resolution lie upon the table, and I give notice that at the earliest possible time I shall call it up, at which time I shall submit some remarks upon it and some communications which I have received with respect to the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be printed and lie upon the table.

D. RODNEY BROWNE.

On motion of Mr. FLINT, it was Ordered, That on the application of D. Rodney Browne he is authorized to withdraw from the files of the Senate all papers accompanying Senate bill No. 5131, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, entitled "A bill granting an increase of pension to D. Rodney Browne," there having been no adverse report thereon.

THOMAS GARRETT.

On motion of Mr. MCCUMBER, it was Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 18236) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Garrett, the beneficiary named in the bill having died.

PILGRIMS' MONUMENT AT PROVINCETOWN, MASS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4370) to appropriate the sum of $40,000 as a part contribution toward the erection of a monument at Provincetown, Mass., in commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims and the signing of the Mayflower compact, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "as a part contribution toward the erection of" and insert "to aid in erecting;" on page 2, line 8, after "Association," to insert:

And provided further, That the responsibility for the care and keeping of said monument shall be and remain with the Cape Cod Pilgrims' Memorial Association, it being expressly understood that the United States shall have no responsibility therefor.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINCETON BATTLE MONUMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 333) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton and appropriating $30,000 therefor, which was, in line 15, after "war," to insert:

And provided further, That the responsibility for the care and keeping of said monument and grounds shall be and remain with the Princeton Battle Monument Association, it being expressly understood that the United States shall have no responsibility therefor.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

WEIGHING OF THE MAILS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing a change in the weighing of the mails in the fourth section, which was, in line 4, to strike out all after "six" down to and including "six," in line 8, and to insert "the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to use the average daily weight of mails ascertained during the successive working days from February 20 to April 17, 1906, both inclusive."

Mr. DOLLIVER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment with an amendment as follows, so as to read in lieu of the Senate amendment and in lieu of the words stricken out, "except the following counties in the State of California: Inyo, Tulare, Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego;" and the House agree to the same.

THOS. H. CARTER,

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is detained from the Chamber this morning by illness, I ask that the statehood bill, so called, may be printed showing the changes made by the conference committee, and I ask that the report may be also printed as a Senate document, the present supply having been exhausted.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont as to when it will suit the convenience of the Senators having the conference report on the statehood bill in charge to call it up for consideration?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I did not hear the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] made a request in connection with the printing of the conference report on the statehood bill. I simply inquired when it would suit the convenience of those having the statehood bill in charge to call it up for consideration.

Mr. HALE. The Senator was not asking me?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I was asking the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I suppose the report can be taken up at any time, but, of course, I would prefer that it should not be taken up until the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who has the matter more especially in charge, can be present. He was confined to his room yesterday, and informed me this morning that he was unable to go out. I do not understand that his illness is at all serious, and I expect him here at almost any time.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that there are some Senators who want to be present when that matter is disposed of who desire to leave the city for a day or two, and I should like to have it disposed of at the earliest date. While I do not want to be unreasonable, I shall feel it my duty not to allow the conference report to lie indefinitely on the table.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not believe there is any disposition to delay the matter.

Mr. FORAKER. No, I am sure there is not; but I want to say to the Senator that it will be very inconvenient to some of us if we can not have the report taken up and disposed of at an early day.

Mr. SPOONER. And the Senator from Ohio might add "or to have it taken up inopportunely."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks that the statehood bill may be printed with the amendments agreed to by the conference committee indicated in the bill, and that the report also be printed. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further bills or joint resolutions?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not yet closed. Does the Senator from Maine insist upon his motion?

Mr. HALE. I think, Mr. President, it is important that the naval appropriation bill should be considered, and practically all the morning business has been disposed of——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Maine, and the Chair had not announced that the morning business was ended. I am very anxious to get the conference report on the rate bill in such shape that the conferees can go to work on it again. I do not think it will lead to any discussion; at least I hope it will not; and if the Senator from Maine will kindly give way, or consent that this matter shall be first taken up, I will be obliged to him. He gave notice that he wanted to get the naval appropriation bill up after the morning hour, and it is nearly three-quarters of an hour yet before 2 o'clock.

Mr. ELKINS (to Mr. HALE). I hope the Senator from Maine will yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that I am assuming too much when I say that the Senate evidently intends to send that report back to the conference committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. We expect that, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator expects that. He has been here long and discerns the signs of the times. Now, I have no objection, if it can be understood by the Senate that when the report is sent back to the conference committee it shall be dispossessed of all items that involve new legislation, unconsidered and not adopted by either House—that is, that all new matter shall be struck from the bill——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Let me complete my remarks.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to ask the Senator is he not assuming a good deal, if he will permit me to say so, when he undertakes to indicate the line of work that the conferees shall follow, when it is contrary to the rules for the Senate to instruct conferees? I think the conferees can be trusted to examine for themselves what are the rights of the Senate, as well as what are their powers and duties, and that they can also be trusted to perform those in good faith; and I object, and shall continue to object, to have the Senator from Maine undertake to indicate what he feels and intends that we shall do. I want the Senate to say that.

Mr. HALE. I have not indicated a single proposition which the committee of conference has injected into this report. The Senate, I say again, very evidently means that the report shall go back. Now, it can go back after spending a day here in debating and delaying appropriation bills. I do not pretend to say what the amendments are; the conferees know well enough what they have put in that is new matter. If the time of the taking effect of the legislation should not be for sixty days, in order that the machinery might be set going, that can be effected by a joint resolution providing for it that will go through the Senate and the House in three minutes. It is not necessary for the conferees to assume to put such a provision into the bill. Time and again since I have been a member of the Senate a measure has been put into operation or postponed by a joint resolution.

Now, what I want is to do business. It is my desire that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill, but if the Senator gets up his conference report it may give rise to discussion here which will occupy the whole day.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has to be discussed some day, and I do not see the difference between discussing it to-day and to-morrow. The conference report may give rise to debate, but I do not think the Senator from Maine is justified in assuming that the Senate is going to do one thing or the other, and to instruct the conferees——

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to instruct the conferees.

Mr. TILLMAN. I contend that I have the floor, and I am appealing to the Senate to take up the report. If the Senate wants to take up the naval bill, I will bow, of course, to the will of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have no more interest in getting the business of the Senate done than any other Senator here. I said this morning that I thought it was good business to take up the appropriation bills and pass them. The consideration of the conference report can be proceeded with at any time. If the Senate wants to take it up this morning, I will withdraw my motion, and the Senator can move to proceed to the consideration of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all I ask. If the Senate prefers to take up the naval appropriation bill, I certainly shall consent, and have no objection at all.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me make the motion, and then——

Mr. LODGE. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is a way to get the report back to the conferees. I would have asked to withdraw it but for the fact that the conferees can not get the report back except by unanimous consent. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED ISLE OF PINES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that Senate resolution No. 103 may go over until to-morrow, with the privileges that now belong to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it is due the conferees and due the Senate that the conferees should make an explanation.

Mr. HALE. If I had known that this matter was to be debated, I would not have withdrawn my motion.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will not take three minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. It will take three minutes, and more than that. I want to make some remarks on this report before it is disposed of. I think we ought to express ourselves as to some of the changes made in the report, in order that the conferees may have the benefit of our views.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a motion, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am in possession of the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator from South Carolina if he would yield to the Senator from Maine, and he yielded.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. HALE. I can move at any time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill. Evidently this matter is going to lead to debate, and I object to that.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Maine, as he says, can make a motion to take up a bill, provided he has the floor. But he can not take a Senator off the floor when he is in charge of a bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to make my explanation first. However, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The idea that we can discuss and dispose of this matter in three minutes had better be given up. There is a mass of new matter in the conference report to which attention has been called.

Mr. HALE. I simply wish to give notice that when the Senator from South Carolina has finished his remarks, if the Chair will recognize me, I will move to proceed to the consideration of the naval bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not do that, and that we may proceed with the report until 2 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I expected to get the bill up an hour ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to make an explanation, and then the Senate will do as it pleases, of course.

Mr. President, as a Senator who has been burned, so to speak, by the action of conferees exceeding their powers and authority, mention of which has been made several times by me in this body, I would be the last man to go beyond the rule that I have sought to have others obey—not to inject new matter or to exceed the powers of a conference committee. The words which have been put into this bill by the conference committee which are new, and in inserting which we knew we exceeded our authority and for which we expect to take the responsibility, are few, and as to them we throw ourselves on the good nature and mercy of the Senate. In our desire to make the bill workable, and in order to make it clearly understood and to make it a matter that would not be subject to litigation, we did undertake to put in, in three or four places, words where we had no authority to put them in.

If Senators will kindly follow me, each Senator can learn what we have done and what we had no rightful power to do. On the top of page 12 of the last print—June 2—the words "transportation or facilities" were inserted after the word "traffic" at the end of the preceding line. It is not necessary to state the reason why those words were put in, but it seemed to us that it was necessary to clarify the matter with respect to contracts, agreements, or arrangements which are to be filed with the Commission. If the point of order is made against those words in the Senate, or whether or not it is, I think the conferees will take them out. I for one will vote to take them out. We had no right to put them in.

Page 21, line 9: The words "or transportation" are inserted where we had no authority or right to put them in. The reason why we put those words in will be found in line 17, where we inserted the words "rates or." This was all one sentence, and it related to a general and specific subject, and the word "rates" being in the first place and the word "transportation" being in the second place, the conferees thought it best to make it uniform, so that the two allusions should be to the same subject. As I said a while ago, knowing we had no right to put them in, but endeavoring to make the bill workable, we put them in, and we take the responsibility. There can be no pretense of any deception, and if the Senate wants to take them out, I shall be glad to have them taken out.

That makes three words that have gone in. On page 40——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the matter on page 21 is as the bill came from the House and was in nowise amended by the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is not correct. The words printed in capitals in lines 9 and 10 are new matter, inserted by the conferees and agreed to by neither House. The words "in its judgment" and "and fairly remunerative" were stricken out by the Senate, and the conferees have agreed to leave them out.

Mr. BACON. The words inserted by the conferees are inserted in a clause that was not amended by the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is it. That is a question for the parliamentarians to determine.

The next amendment, which we knew we had no authority to put in, or at least as to which we were doubtful of our authority, is on page 40. We there inserted the words:

> Said Commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive $5,000 compensation annually, and an assistant secretary, who shall receive $4,000 compensation annually.

I have consulted the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, who has had a good deal to do with making up conference reports and with the compilation of all the rules that we have got on that subject—in other words, the manual reported May 15, 1902, by Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, and prepared by Mr. Cleaves. I asked Mr. Cleaves whether or not the amendment on page 40, the words I have just referred to, was amenable to the point of order. He said frankly, "I do not know." But the reason for putting those words in was this: Section 24, the whole section, relating to the composition and salary of the Commission, was stricken out by the Senate. In it the number of the Commissioners was seven and the salary was $10,000, an increase of two Commissioners over the number agreed to by the Senate and an increase in salary of $2,500 each. The House conferees demanded that we should restore this provision—they did not demand anything; they requested. The conference was pleasant and agreeable, and everybody labored earnestly to get the best possible bill out of the conflicting opinions of the two Houses. But, anyhow, the House requested and urged the Senate conferees to reinsert the section. Taking into consideration the fact that the change involved in this law will vastly increase the work of the Commission and that the dignity and power of the Commissioners are recognized by an increase of salary, the Senate conferees felt that the responsibility of this additional labor at least warranted an increase in salary in this direction. Appreciating the fact that the secretary would be the responsible officer necessarily charged with a great many duties that the Commissioners would not be able to see after, we felt that if $10,000 was a proper salary for a Commissioner, it was almost necessary that there should be an increase in the salary of the secretary.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through.

I will say right now that while I have noted that a good deal of the personal equation enters into this question, and that there is some opposition, my view of a legislator's duty is not that he is to consider men, but measures, and to make a symmetrical and workable and properly adjusted law, and therefore we felt that we had the right to insert this clause. Therefore the Senate conferees agreed to the suggestion for an increase in the salary of the secretary, and for the appointment of an assistant secretary.

Mr. HALE. I think there is where the conference committee has gone beyond its power. When you come to the Commissioners, the matter was fairly in issue between the two Houses on the compensation of the Commissioners and the additional number. The House put in two more Commissioners and increased the salary. The Senate struck it out, and left only five Commissioners at the old salary. But as to the secretary, neither House had increased the salary. The Senate declined to increase it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senate also declined to increase the number or the compensation of the Commissioners.

Mr. HALE. Then the committee has created a new office absolutely. The Senator of course understands——

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to call the Senator's attention and the attention of other Senators to the fact that the rules as to conference reports, as I have studied them—and I have done a little of it—are very lax.

Mr. HALE. They ought not to be.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what the other conferees will do. I know what I shall do in regard to this proposition.

That leaves only one question in which we clearly exceeded our power. That was on page 41, section 11, No. 51, where without authority or power we inserted the words "sixty days." We did it on the theory that it was utterly impossible for this bill to go into effect immediately without creating an immense amount of friction and disturbance in the working of the machinery of the railroads. All the railroads will have to prepare and publish their rates. It was impossible that this law should go into effect immediately. It would have been better, probably, to have called this an oversight, and to have passed a joint resolution, and probably it would have been better to have done the same thing with regard to other new matter which we injected. We intended at no time to do other than to explain and to throw ourselves upon the mercy of our colleagues and say, "Gentlemen, we have done what we think is proper and wise under the circumstances. If you want to stick by the letter of the rules, of course we will obey your orders."

With this explanation I feel that everything in this bill that is subject to a point of order has been mentioned. There may be a difference of opinion in regard to two or three other matters, but I hope that the motion to disagree to the conference report will now be agreed to, and let the matter go back. Yet I am ready to discuss any question that Senators wish to discuss.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that there appears to be new matter on page 7. I did not hear the Senator address himself to that. I should like to have an explanation as to why that was inserted by the conferees, especially in view of the fact that it was considered in the committee and was offered in the Senate and was voted down.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will make such explanation as I myself have. The matter printed in italics is a Senate amendment, and the words in capitals are the words proposed by the House conferees to the Senate amendment. A point of order can not be made, because they are clearly a legitimate part of this provision. My attention and that of the country has been called to the fact that some of the trunk lines in the United States, through lines, engaged in interstate commerce, have denied, in an infamous and tyrannical spirit of forgetfulness of the rights of citizens, the privilege of physical connection between their own lines and lines that sought to connect with them. The case of the Red Rock Fuel Company, in West Virginia, has been notably cited in this connection.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator certainly knows that I do not want, under the circumstances, to enter into a discussion of the merits of this proposition. I understood the Senator to say that he had commented on all the new matter in the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. All the new matter subject to a point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that that is entirely new matter. It was something that was not in the bill. The Senator from West Virginia offered it as an amendment, in order that he might get it into the bill. We voted that it should not go into the bill. I am not speaking of the merits of it. When it comes to that, I shall take more time than I now propose to consume. But inasmuch as the Senator said that he had commented on all the new matter in the bill, I wanted to call attention to this, which I think is the first important new matter put into the bill, and just as important as anything put in the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is new matter relating to passes. It is entirely different from anything the Senate conceived.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senate adopted a provision in relation to passes, prohibiting them with certain exceptions. The conferees do away with the exceptions. That I understand to be the function of conferees. There is nothing new about that. They had a right to do that. I shall discuss that later on. I do not want to occupy more than two or three minutes of time.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection to the conference report being disagreed to in order to get it back, but if Senators want to debate it——

Mr. FORAKER. I want the conferees to have the benefit of my views, if they wish them.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I have given notice that I shall call up the appropriation bill. At the termination of the Senator's remarks I shall make the motion.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood that the Senator from Maine wanted to proceed with the appropriation bill, and as I did not rise to discuss the merits of this report, but only to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that he omitted to mention one provision which I think was new matter, I only wanted to call attention to it so that we might not appear to be acquiescing in his statement that he had discussed all the new matter there was. At another time, if it be not convenient at this time to do it, I want to say something, not very much.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I move——

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand the Senator from Maine has not the right to intervene with a motion when a motion is pending to disagree to the conference report. There is a motion pending before the motion of the Senator from Maine, and I think the Senate is entitled to have a vote on that motion.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I make a point of order on that motion, and my point of order is this: When a conference report is pending here and the question is upon adopting or rejecting that report, a motion upon another subject-matter is not in order. Any motion in reference to the conference report is in order, but a motion to bring up another subject is not in order while that matter is pending.

Mr. ELKINS. That is precisely the point I wished to make. The Senator in charge of the conference report has made a motion, and it is before the Senate. I do not see how the Senator from Maine, with his desire to push the appropriation bill and to push everything else out of the Senate, can urge it on the consideration of the Senate at this time and ignore a motion made by a Senator on an important question to have the conference report recommitted, so that we can go to work upon it. I want to assure the Senator from Maine he will not gain any time by such a course. He says he wants to get away before July, but it will be far in July before we get away if he persists in this course.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALE. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. NELSON. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to call the attention of Senators to Rule IX:

> The Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, * * * and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:
> First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

That is of the highest privilege and takes precedence of everything except the motions specified.

Mr. NELSON. Not when a privileged motion is pending.

Mr. LODGE. It takes precedence of everything. Language can not be plainer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order and holds that the motion of the Senator from Maine is in order under Rule IX.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act:

On June 1:

S. 6038. An act authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If he has not voted, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is absent from the Chamber. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTUS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE]. I understand that he is not present, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 20, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18750) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the customary course be taken—that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

Mr. ELKINS. I object. I ask that the bill be read in full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not insist on that course. Nothing but a loss of time will result from reading the entire bill through. I never knew it to be done in the consideration of an appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we always desire to hear the Senator from Maine on this side and we are very seldom able to do so here, because he always speaks in a conversational tone.

Mr. HALE. When the Senate is in order I have always been able to make myself heard. I was saying that I hope, on reflection, the Senator from West Virginia will not insist on doing what I never knew done in the consideration of an appropriation bill. It will be only so much time lost in first reading the bill through. We always dispense with the formal reading and then take up the amendments of the committee as they are reached. But the Senator has the right, if he chooses to occupy the time. I hope, on reflection, he will not insist on objecting to my request.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to add my plea to that of the Senator from Maine, and beg the Senator from West Virginia not to consume any more time in this matter than it is necessary for us to do. It is not going to accomplish anything, because Senators can read the bill as they go along. There are necessarily some questions here that will be discussed. The Senator from Maine has expressed my views and feeling this morning in regard to hurrying up the work of the session and getting away some time before the hot weather makes Washington so uncomfortable that we will hardly be able to discharge our duties properly here. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will yield and let the bill be taken up in the ordinary course.

Mr. ELKINS. I am not on the Naval Committee, and I do not know what is in the bill. I asked the Senator from Maine and pleaded with him to allow us to have a vote on the very important motion made by the Senator from South Carolina. He refused to do it. I might as well state that. I told him it would take a little more time if he insisted on that course; and if I have a right to hear the bill read I want to have it read.

Mr. HALE. I am not seeking to get the bill up to the prejudice of the rate bill. I want to have that bill passed. It was not I that did this; the Senate did it. A half dozen Senators about me assured me that if this bill was not taken up the entire day would be consumed by debating the other matter. Under those conditions I felt that it was my duty to give the Senate a chance to help along the appropriation bills. Now, the Senator has a right, notwithstanding all appeals, to have the Senate spend an hour in the reading of the bill. Nobody will listen to it. Everybody will go off to luncheon.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HALE. I yield the floor. I have said all I wish to say.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not trying to interfere in this matter, but I wish to say to my colleague on the committee that I voted "nay" against taking up the appropriation bill, and for the reason that I was in hopes we could get a vote on the other measure, so that we could reconsider and take out of the railroad rate bill whatever seemed to be in there improperly. But we were beaten, and now in the interest of progress and of getting through the session some time, I hope the Senator will allow the bill to go on in the usual way.

Mr. ELKINS. I think we can adjourn about the 20th of July. Then let us fully understand what is in the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SPOONER. The sooner we get through with this bill the sooner we will get to the conference report on the rate bill.

Mr. ELKINS. I am indifferent when we get to the conference report. The Senate has not allowed us to take it back to the conferees, and I am entirely indifferent as to whether it goes back there for two weeks.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from West Virginia is always pleasant except when he is wrong. He is not dealing simply with the Senator from Maine; he is dealing with a matter which involves the convenience of every Senator in this Chamber. We are all anxious to get through with the business of the session as rapidly as can properly be done. The Senator is simply filibustering to delay—that is the operation of it—the disposition by the Senate of the conference report on the rate bill. It accomplishes no purpose at all, except to take time. It accomplishes no useful purpose whatever. I believe every Senator here would be glad to have the Senator from West Virginia withdraw his demand for the formal reading of the bill. I sincerely hope he will do it.

PANAMA CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18750) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and read to line 13 on page 24.

Mr. CLAY. I do not understand the paragraph beginning on page 3, line 9, "For commissioners and interest." Does it mean pay for commissions and interest?

Mr. HALE. The bill is now not being read for discussion, but simply the formal reading. The Senator can come back to that afterwards.

Mr. CLAY. I beg pardon. I thought the objection to the formal reading of the bill had been withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. No; the Senator from West Virginia insists upon it.

Mr. ELKINS. I did want to know what is in the naval appropriation bill, and I wanted the Senate to know, but, yielding to the solicitation and appeals of some of my colleagues, I withdraw my demand for the formal reading of the bill. I hope the next time when a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of some question the Senator from Maine will allow that motion to be put before he projects and injects the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. The demand is withdrawn, and I renew my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MONEY. I did not understand the Chair exactly; I beg pardon, but I rise to inquire whether the proposition was that all the committee amendments be accepted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No; that they be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill and acted upon before other amendments are proposed. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Pay of the Navy," on page 2, line 6, after the word "constructors," to insert:

For hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "million," to insert "two hundred and sixty-nine thousand six hundred and thirty-seven;" so as to read:

And 2,500 apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $20,269,637.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, require the whole or a part of the bounty allowed upon enlistment to be refunded in cases where men are discharged during the first year of enlistment, by request, for inaptitude, as undesirable, or for disability not incurred in line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay, miscellaneous," on page 4, line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter in cases where orders for travel are given to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion may direct that either mileage or else their actual and necessary expenses only shall be allowed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

To reimburse officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who were on duty under orders in San Francisco during the recent fire in that city for losses of clothing and other personal effects sustained by them through said fire, $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such reimbursement shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and upon vouchers to be approved by him in each case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 22, to insert:

That all officers of the Navy below the grade of rear-admiral, with creditable records, including those retired with the relative rank of commodore, who served during the civil war, and who were honorably retired prior to the passage of an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899, shall be advanced on the retired list one grade above the grade or rank now held by them, to take effect from the date of the approval of said act; and that rear-admirals retired prior to the passage of said act shall receive the same pay as officers of the Navy of corresponding grade who have been retired under said act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any officer who has received an advance of grade since his retirement or has been restored to the Navy and placed on the retired list with promotion thereon by virtue of the provisions of a special act of Congress. This provision shall in no case authorize any claim for back pay and shall have effect only for the future, and shall also apply in like manner to officers of the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 18, to insert:

That officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the civil war and were retired prior to 1904 shall receive the full benefit of the act approved April 23, 1904, in so far as the same provides for the promotion of civil war veterans to the next higher grade above that at which they were retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

That the provisions contained in section 13 of an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," reading as follows: "Provided, That such officers when on shore shall receive the allowances, but 15 per cent less pay than when on sea duty; but this provision shall not apply to warrant officers commissioned under section 12 of this act," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 24, after the word "seven," to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy for legal advice out of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 2, to insert:

The solicitor in the office of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall have the rank, highest pay, and allowances of a commander.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from Maine for an explanation in regard to this paragraph. I understand that the solicitor is a civilian. Why should he be given the rank of a commander? I have no objection to giving him the pay and allowances of a commander if that be important, but why give him the rank?

Mr. HALE. It is one of those things that occasionally have been done. Of course the object is to keep a very good man, a very good lawyer in this part of the naval establishment, which has got to be so large that it needs his services. It is an encouragement to the good lawyer who is there, whom everybody knows about, Mr. Hanna, who is the wheel horse and does the work. The Department has no solicitor, as some Departments have, and it was thought nothing more than commensurate with his work and his ability that he should be given a permanence. It is undoubtedly a thing not often done, but the committee thought it was wise to give him the permanence which is provided in the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator if he takes rank as a commander would not that entitle him to promotion in line and ultimately he might be eligible to the command of a battle ship? It has been suggested to me by those who are better acquainted with the workings of the Navy Department than myself that it would have that result.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a good suggestion. It was intended that this should be the ultimate rank and pay. There is no objection to making it read "rank, highest pay, and allowances of a commander, and of no higher rank." I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator about the preceding amendment. I do not remember that we have heretofore had any such item. It is a small amendment:

And provided further, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy for legal advice out of this appropriation.

Is there not a legal officer of the Department to give legal advice on questions that may arise?

Mr. HALE. The Department has grown to be very large, and it has not a solicitor. Occasionally there are matters coming up, not here, but in reference to matters outside, at navy-yards, where, instead of having a man all the time, the Secretary can call in a good lawyer and pay him a $500 fee for work, and then it is ended.

Mr. CLAY. I do not remember an appropriation of this kind heretofore.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary asked for it.

Mr. SPOONER. What has been the statutory designation heretofore of this gentleman in the office of the Judge-Advocate-General?

Mr. HALE. He is solicitor in the Judge-Advocate-General's office.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that the term in the statutes?

Mr. HALE. It is what he is. The Senator is a lawyer and understands the great importance of having a good permanent lawyer there. The Judge-Advocate's department is not presided over by a lawyer. A naval officer is generally taken. The Judge-Advocate, I say, is not a lawyer, and some lawyer has got to do the work of that department.

Mr. SPOONER. Military rank has been given in the War Department to civilians who have had long service there.

Mr. HALE. I had that in mind when I said that sometimes we do rather extraordinary things.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it anticipated that this will be followed hereafter by additional legislation?

Mr. HALE. I do not suppose there will ever be additional legislation, if this passes. We have in the War Department a man doing purely clerical work and I do not know but that he is a major-general.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is a major-general. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] knows something about the merits of this man. He is a very worthy and very modest man.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not question that.

Mr. HALE. And he never appeared before the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I have known the gentleman mentioned by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] for a great many years. He was an employee in the Department while I was Secretary of the Interior and was very close to me. He is a man of unquestioned legal talent and of excellent character. He has been for many years in the office, and I am sure he is well qualified for the place which it is proposed to give him. He has never said anything to me about preferment of this kind. He certainly has not importuned me at all. He is entirely too modest to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. I think this gentleman is a man of fine qualifications as a lawyer, and I know he is a modest man.

Mr. TELLER. Very.

Mr. SPOONER. He has served with great fidelity, but, at the same time, there is something objectionable about this provision. I do not object to him. What I do not like about this legislation is that under it every succeeding solicitor will take this rank. I do not object to the pay and allowances. What we did after the war in the War Department was abnormal; it was done rather as a matter of reward to men who had rendered valuable service; and it would not have been done, I think, but for that. I want to limit the provision now to this gentleman——

Mr. HALE. I think that is right.

Mr. SPOONER. Instead of making it a permanent provision.

Mr. HALE. I have been casting about for language to effect that object. If you put it that this shall only apply to one appointment of a solicitor——

Mr. CLAY. Would not that be rather unusual?

Mr. HALE. It would, undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAY. Would it not be very unusual to make it apply to one particular man?

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is a precedent for it. We can hunt up language. I think there is a similar provision in the law as to the Army.

Mr. HALE. We can not say that the President shall appoint a particular man; but we can fix language that will make it apply only to this single appointment. I think that is a proper thing to be done.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator from Maine will frame such an amendment. I was not in the committee when this matter came up; in fact, I was not in the city when the committee considered this provision; and while this is a very worthy gentleman, a very valuable officer, I have some misgivings and objections to making a perpetual position in the Navy for a civilian. We might get a bad one next time, when this man dies, and make him a commander, whether he is really a great lawyer or a valued officer, or whether he is merely a political favorite. It is a precedent that I do not like. I hope that the provision will apply to this man only, and I shall be glad to agree to an amendment which will accomplish that object.

Mr. HALE. Then I suggest, after the word "commander," in line 6, to insert "and of no higher rank: Provided, That only one appointment shall be made hereunder."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 6, after the word "commander," it is proposed to insert "and of no higher rank: Provided, That only one appointment shall be made hereunder."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection——

Mr. BACON. I was out of the Chamber for a moment, and I desire to ask a question simply for information. I caught only the closing words of what was said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If I understood him correctly, this provision relates to a particular individual. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Maine has already given an explanation, I shall not ask him to repeat it, because I can see it in the RECORD; but if he has not made such explanation, I should be glad to have him do so now.

Mr. HALE. I have already explained it.

Mr. BACON. Then I shall read it in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Now, I ask the Secretary to again state the proviso which I have proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That only one appointment shall be made hereunder.

Mr. SPOONER. No; that will not do.

Mr. HALE. No; I see that will not do. Perhaps it should be "and that when a vacancy occurs in this office, no new appointment shall be made."

Mr. SPOONER. That will not do.

Mr. HALE. Why not?

Mr. SPOONER. If you once establish the office of solicitor, who is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, you will have the solicitor always, and the limitation which is made here simply goes to the rank. I think we had better pass this provision for the present.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. Language can be found to cover this case, I think.

Mr. HALE. Let it be passed over for the present, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 7, line 14, after the word "thereof," to strike out "transportation to the places of enlistment, or to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on account of expiration of enlistment, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu hereof;" so as to read:

Transportation, recruiting, and contingent: Transportation: For the transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof, transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter enlisted men, discharged on account of expiration of enlistment, shall receive in lieu of transportation and subsistence, travel allowance of 4 cents per mile from the place of discharge to the place of enlistment, for travel in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not rise to the amendment which has just been agreed to, Mr. President, but I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Maine to give me the authority upon which discharges from the Navy are paid for.

Mr. HALE. My attention was diverted for a second. Will the Senator kindly repeat his question?

Mr. SPOONER. As I understand it, though it has not often happened, men discharged from the Navy sometimes pay for their discharge.

Mr. BACON. I think not.

Mr. SPOONER. It has happened.

Mr. BACON. That is not the law now.

Mr. SPOONER. It is the practice as to the Army, but I know of no law which provides for it, and my purpose is simply to ascertain from the Senator from Maine under what authority, if any, that is done.

Mr. BACON. If I understand correctly, there is now no authority under which an enlisted man can buy a discharge from the Navy. It is limited to the Army.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know of any statutory authority under which an enlisted man buys his discharge from the Army.

Mr. BACON. He does it under the order of the War Department; but the order of the Navy Department does not permit it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is precisely what I want to get at—what authority has the War Department or the Navy Department to make any such order?

Mr. BACON. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. SPOONER. What authority in law has the War Department or the Navy Department to make any such order? If a man ought to be discharged, if he presents a good reason to the Department for his discharge, by what authority is it made a condition precedent to this discharge that he shall pay for it?

Mr. HALE. That is a new matter to me.

Mr. SPOONER. I sought to procure the discharge of a man from the Navy on very strong grounds, but was informed that that was the rule; that he must purchase his discharge.

Mr. HALE. I do not know to what rule the Senator refers. There is not, so far as I know, any rule in the Army or Navy by which a man can buy his discharge.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think that the rule has not been practiced as broadly as has been stated, but it has been customary in certain cases to discharge men where they are the sole support of a dependent father or mother. There are other cases where the same degree of responsibility may not rest upon a man, but having served a part of his term he buys his unexpired time—this, when he desires to enter into, in some degree, the care of his dependent or semidependent relatives or for other acceptable reasons. Whether it is a good or bad practice is a matter that we are not passing upon now, but the law provides for it. These discharges are rather unusual and are resorted to in not a large percentage of enlistments.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: When the question was up a moment ago about the authority of the War Department to discharge enlisted men, either by favor or upon the men buying and paying for unexpired time, I made a few remarks, and I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the statutes governing the same, which are section 4 of the act of June 16, 1890, as follows:

SEC. 4. That in time of peace the President may, in his discretion and under such rules and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe, permit any enlisted man to purchase his discharge from the Army. The purchase money to be paid under this section shall be paid to a paymaster of the Army and be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of one or more of the current appropriations for the support of the Army, to be indicated by the Secretary of War, and be available for the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year in which the discharge is made.

And section 30 of the act of February 1, 1901, as follows:

SEC. 30. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter otherwise direct: Provided, That in the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law, and after the expiration of one year of service, should either of his parents die, leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War.

I also ask that War Department General Orders, No. 4, dated January 8, 1906, may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The matter referred to is as follows:

General Orders, No. 4.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 8, 1906.

General Orders, No. 48, War Department, March 15, 1904, is hereby rescinded and the following substituted therefor:

Under the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1890, the President has prescribed the following rules governing the purchase of discharge from the Army, and they are published for the information and guidance of all concerned:

1. In time of peace, except as hereinafter provided, any enlisted man who has completed one year's service as such, and is not undergoing punishment or under charges, may obtain the privilege of purchasing his discharge, subject to the approval of the authority competent to order it. The price of purchase will consist of the travel allowances due on discharge, which will be retained by the United States in all cases, and in addition thereto the following:

After one years' service, $120.
After two years' service, $100.
After three years' service, $90.
After four years' service, $85.
After five years' service, $80.
After six years' service, $65.
After seven years' service, $60.
After eight years' service, $55.
After nine years' service, $40.
After ten years' service, $35.
After eleven years' service, $30.

Service in the Regular Army only will be considered, and such service is not required to be continuous in determining the purchase price of discharge.

Company commanders will enter on the final statements of men who are discharged by purchase a full statement of all previous enlistments terminated by honorable discharge, showing the dates of all such enlistments and discharges.

2. To obtain the privilege of purchasing his discharge the soldier will make application to department headquarters, through military channels, giving his reasons for desiring his discharge. The company commander, in forwarding the application, will state in full the condition of the accounts of the applicant, giving a complete statement of the soldier's service, with any information which would, in the light of this order, bear on the granting or withholding of the privilege requested.

If the statement of the soldier's accounts does not show that he has sufficient credit with the United States to cover his indebtedness to the Government, including the price of purchase, the company commander will so notify the soldier and will not forward the application until the amount of deficit has been deposited with him by the soldier.

3. Upon receipt of applications, made as prescribed herein and fulfilling the given conditions, department commanders may, except in the cases specified in paragraph 4 of this order, direct the discharges requested, but where there is lacking essential information that may be supplied from records required to be kept at the War Department, or where the department commander for any reason deems it inadvisable to take final action in the case, he will forward the application with his remarks thereon to the Military Secretary of the Army.

4. Applications from the following sources for discharge under this order will be forwarded through military channels to the Military Secretary of the Army:

Enlisted men of the several staff departments.

Enlisted men on recruiting duty.

Unassigned recruits.

5. Where a soldier makes application for discharge by purchase on account of dependency of near relatives not covered by paragraph 9 of this order, and shows in connection therewith that a state of actual destitution exists, that he has to the extent of his opportunities and ability made contributions to the support of such relatives, but that these contributions have proved insufficient to relieve the destitution, the authority competent to order the discharge may, in his discretion, remit such part of the purchase price of discharge, except travel allowances, as may seem to him proper and necessary by reason of the inability of the soldier to pay the full amount. In this class of cases no advance deposit will be required of the soldier prior to forwarding his application, but upon receipt of the order authorizing his discharge the soldier must deposit with the company commander an amount sufficient to cover his indebtedness to the Government, including the price of purchase as fixed by the authority ordering the discharge.

6. Except under paragraphs 5 and 9, discharges will not be granted under the provisions of this order to soldiers serving in Alaska or outside the continental limits of the United States, except when their organizations are ordered to return thereto, nor to soldiers serving within the States and Territories of the Union after their organizations are ordered to take station in Alaska or outside the continental limits of the United States.

7. Department commanders will carefully scrutinize each application for discharge by way of purchase submitted to them, with the view of determining whether there is any special reason why the applicant should not be so discharged and whether a satisfactory reason has been offered as a basis for the application.

It is not the policy of the War Department to permit a soldier to purchase his discharge when there is any special reason in his case to the contrary, or when he offers a trifling reason or no reason at all in support of his application; nor is it the policy of the Department to debar from the privilege of purchasing his discharge under the provisions of this order any soldier in whose case investigation shows that he has reasonable grounds for seeking to purchase his discharge and that there is no unusual reason why he should not be permitted to do so.

8. Discharges by favor as distinguished from purchase are illegal, and will not be granted, except under the conditions set forth in paragraph 9 of this order.

9. Section 30 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, authorizes discharge under the following conditions, viz: In the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law and after the expiration of one year of service, should either of his parents die leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War.

Applications for discharge under this paragraph will be forwarded through military channels, with the required proof, to the Military Secretary of the Army. (1086564, M. S. O.)

By order of the Secretary of War:

ADNA R. CHAFFEE,
Lieutenant-General, Chief of Staff.

Official.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is speaking now of the Army?

Mr. WARREN. Of the Army entirely, and not of the Navy.

Mr. SPOONER. The case I had some years ago in connection with the Navy was a case in which the man upon every principle of fair play was entitled to a discharge. I was informed that he could have it by purchasing it, but I do not understand by what authority any Department of the Government can require a man to purchase his discharge from the service in the absence of statutory provision.

Mr. HALE. I do not know. I have never known of such a case in the Navy.

Mr. BACON. I will state, Mr. President, that I have had occasion recently to look into the matter. So far as the Army is concerned, there is a regular order which specifies at what stage in a man's service he may purchase his discharge. He can not purchase it until he has been in the service for a year, and then the particular price is $120. After two years' service it is another price, and so on; but in the Navy the order of the President does not permit the discharge of a man by the payment of any sum of money.

Mr. SPOONER. It did formerly.

Mr. BACON. It does not now.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 11, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the naval station at Port Royal, S. C., including all buildings and other property thereon and the employees attached thereto, be hereby transferred to and placed under the control of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, as an adjunct to the naval training station, Rhode Island, to be used for the instruction of recruits during the winter months and at such other time as may be deemed advisable; and for that purpose the following sums are appropriated: Necessary repairs to the buildings to fit them for berthing, messing, and drilling purposes, and for galleys, latrines, and washhouses for apprentice seamen, and for purposes of administration in connection with the training of the same, $51,000; installing necessary distilling plant or fresh-water supply, $20,000; maintenance of the station as a training station, $25,000; in all, $96,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 11, after the word "fund," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That for the performance of such additional services in and about the Naval Home as may be necessary, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ, on the recommendation of the governor, beneficiaries in said home, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Secretary and paid from the appropriation for the support of the home.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 15, line 23, to increase the appropriation for reserve powder and shell from $1,000,000 to $2,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 10, to increase the appropriation for reserve guns for ships of the Navy from $500,000 to $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 20, before the word "station," to insert "torpedo;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.: For one chemist, at $2,500; one clerk, at $1,200; one draftsman, at $1,500; in all, $5,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Equipment," on page 20, after line 20, insert:

For the preparation of sites, furnishing and erecting masts, buildings, and machinery foundations for United States naval wireless telegraph stations on the Pacific coast in the States of Washington, Oregon, and California, to be immediately available and to be limited to the purposes above named, $65,000.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question in regard to the item on page 20, lines 21, 22, 23, and 24. I may be mistaken about it, but my recollection is that we appropriated a sum of money, at a previous session of Congress, for the purpose of completing this work.

Mr. HALE. There has been an appropriation. In the report of the committee accompanying the bill under consideration——

Mr. CLAY. On what page?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will look at page 4 of the report, he will find that the Acting Secretary of the Navy has written a letter in which he says that this service, which I suppose has proved very valuable, can not be completed in these different States without this sum of money.

Mr. CLAY. I thought that a previous appropriation bill contained a sufficient amount for the completion of this work. Is this an additional appropriation?

Mr. HALE. This appropriation is to complete stations heretofore authorized.

Mr. CLAY. Was it found that the work could not be completed for the amount originally appropriated?

Mr. PERKINS. If the chairman of the committee will permit me, I will state that the appropriation is to complete wireless stations in process of construction on the coasts of Washington, Oregon, and California. The Government has deemed it expedient, indeed necessary, that there should be additional wireless telegraph stations established. If my friend from Georgia will read the letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy referred to by the chairman of the committee, he will find ample reasons, I think, why the Senate committee recommended this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I will read an extract from the letter of the Acting Secretary.

These show—

That is, plans and specifications and estimates—

These show that the cost to complete the five stations will approximate $65,000 in addition to the amount already expended under contracts for equipment.

Other stations contemplated on the Pacific coast are either completed or being constructed. The stations already built are of great and constantly increasing value.

This appropriation will complete and equip these stations, but I should not want to say that in the future the service may not require the establishment of still additional stations. When they are required, we shall have to appropriate for them. When we go into this subject as we ought to, as these stations are established and their needs are recognized in the Department, we will have to appropriate the money for them or decline to do so; but I should not want to say that this is final.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 21, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That of the above sum not exceeding $1,500 may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy in procuring a survey and estimate of cost for a channel into Welles Harbor, Midway Islands.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine, if he can do so, to refer me to the page of the report which relates to that particular item.

Mr. HALE. I have a letter here from the Acting Secretary of the Navy. It refers to an item in the naval appropriation bill approved March 3, 1905, as follows:

Provided, That of the above a sum not exceeding $1,500 may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy in procuring a survey and estimate of cost for a channel into Welles Harbor, Midway Islands.

The letter goes on:

The Bureau of Equipment, the Bureau having cognizance of this appropriation, reports that active steps have been taken to procure the survey and estimate referred to in the proviso just quoted. It has assembled the necessary apparatus at Honolulu, but finds it will be practically impossible to undertake to enter upon the survey before July 1, 1906.

They need this provision in order to carry it into the next year.

Mr. BACON. The item is small, and it was not my purpose to object to it at all. I really desired information.

Mr. HALE. That is the reason.

Mr. BACON. Those islands are very peculiar. There are two or three of them, each being simply a coral reef; and I had some curiosity to know what was the particular harbor and where it was situated in which this channel was proposed to be surveyed and constructed. But I suppose the Department has the matter in charge, and it is not necessary that we should know particularly about it.

Mr. HALE. They find they can not spend the money heretofore appropriated this year, and this provision is necessary in order to give them the chance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 32, after line 6, to insert:

That the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks shall be selected from the members of the Corps of Civil Engineers of the Navy having not less than seven years' active service.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine what is the change in the law which this amendment would indicate? I do not know what the present law is in regard to this subject, but this amendment would indicate that some change is desired to be accomplished by it.

Mr. HALE. It is intended to put in force what is the present arrangement, and that is that the head of this Bureau, which is civilian and engineering, shall be taken from the Corps of Civil Engineers, and so to fix it as a matter of law. It is not sea duty, but it deals with the engineering of the navy-yards, and the committee believed that the present rule is a good one, and to continue it for the future has provided that the head of this Bureau, which is civilian and engineering, shall be taken from the Corps of Civil Engineers.

Mr. BACON. As the law is now, it is discretionary——

Mr. HALE. It is discretionary?

Mr. BACON. Whether to take him from the civil engineers or from some other branch of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Is the present officer a civil engineer?

Mr. HALE. He is; and a very accomplished officer.

Mr. NELSON. I understand this corps is a part of the naval force.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is a part of the naval force, but it is scientific—it deals with engineering works rather than with fleets and battle ships.

Mr. NELSON. It does not mean civil engineers outside the service.

Mr. BACON. They are part of the establishment.

Mr. HALE. They are part of the establishment.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand that the present chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks is such an officer?

Mr. HALE. He is a naval officer, but not a line officer.

Mr. BACON. Will this amendment prevent an officer in the Corps of Engineers in the Navy holding this office in the future?

Mr. HALE. It provides that he shall occupy it in the future.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to say that the civil engineers here alluded to are not naval officers.

Mr. HALE. No; they are regular naval officers. They are a part of the naval establishment.

Mr. BACON. The present incumbent is of the class indicated as that from which in the future the officer shall be selected?

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that at the present time the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks may be selected, and is selected, from the naval officers. This will confine it simply to the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. HALE. I thought I had just explained that. The present head of this Bureau is a distinguished member of the Corps of Engineers of the Navy.

Mr. FULTON. I understand.

Mr. HALE. They are naval officers.

Mr. FULTON. They are?

Mr. HALE. This is only in the future to provide that the head of this Bureau, which is civilian in its function and deals not with fleets and squadrons and ships, but with engineering duties, shall be taken from the Corps of Engineers in the Navy. They are officers of the Navy, like the Corps of Engineers in the Army.

Mr. FULTON. The Corps of Engineers in the Army are selected from the Army officers, and this narrows the selection simply to those who are detailed to the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Maine, who knows more about this than I do, will permit me, I will say that there used to be a department of engineering, and there is still in the Navy. Those engineers were educated at Annapolis, and they were educated to control and manage the machinery in the ships. But when the personnel bill was passed three or four years ago we merged the line officers and the Corps of Engineers educated at Annapolis, and who were at the head of their classes (because it is regarded as a mark of distinction for a cadet to be able to get into the Engineer Corps), and we are now running our vessels in large degree by employing engineers.

There is, in addition, a bureau of engineering, which has to do with the construction of ships and the management and control of the engineering department of the Navy; a bureau of civil engineering, which has charge of yards and docks. The Bureau of Yards and Docks has been under the control of engineers selected from civil life, and we have in the civil engineering department of the Navy possibly as accomplished a lot of civil engineers as there are in the United States. It is to confine the appointment and control of this Bureau to an officer of this class that this provision is included here, instead of taking an officer selected from the line or somewhere else and putting him in charge of a distinctively civil engineering department of the Navy. The purpose is to confine it to its own branch or bureau.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish myself to make any objection to this amendment, if the Senator having the bill in charge is thoroughly satisfied that it is a proper provision. But I have understood—my information may be entirely inaccurate—that it will operate to the benefit of one individual, and that it is narrowing the field from which selections can be made, and will operate unjustly. However, I do not know enough about it to make the assertion.

Mr. HALE. I can assure the Senator there is nothing of that kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Public Works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 32, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "boiler shop for steam engineering, to complete, $75,000;" and in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and seventy-five" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: Railroad rolling stock, additions, $3,000; sewer system, extension, $3,000; quay walls, to extend, $40,000; grading, to continue, $15,000; central power house, extension, $35,000; central power plant, extension (to cost $120,000), $60,000; central heating plant, extension, $8,000; water system, extension, $5,000; workmen's landing near reservoir, $1,000; shelves, racks, and fittings for storehouse No. 86, $5,000; boiler shop for steam engineering, to complete, $75,000; in all, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 9, on page 35.

Mr. HALE. Some changes are necessary at this point, which I will indicate. In line 23, page 34, I move to strike out the word "complete" and insert "continue;" and in the same line, to strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" and after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifty;" so as to read:

Navy-yard, Charleston, S. C.: Stone and concrete dry dock, to continue, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 35, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 8, after the word "dollars," insert:

Quay wall at dry-dock entrance, $40,000; dry-dock latrines, $3,000; one officers' quarters, $7,000; dispensary building, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 35, line 9, I move to strike out "fifty-nine" and insert "seventy-one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 35, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "thirty;" on page 36, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "sewer system, $3,000;" and in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "thirty-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Dredging and filling in, $30,000; to complete two officers' quarters, $1,200; marine railway, to complete, $5,000; sewer system, $3,000; in all, navy-yard, Key West, Fla., $39,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "telephone system, extensions, $1,500; central power plant, $60,000; water-closet for ships in dock, $2,500;" and in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and forty-one" and insert "two hundred and five;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington: Sewer system, extensions, $3,000; * * * telephone system, extensions, $1,500; central power plant, $60,000; water-closet for ships in dock, $2,500; in all, navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, $205,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "toward construction of a graving dock of concrete and granite, to cost, in all, $1,400,000, $100,000;" and in line 15, before the word "forty," to insert "one hundred and;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.: Water system, $5,000; sewer system, $10,000; conduits and conductors for distribution of power, $5,000; crib for wooden floating dry dock, $20,000; toward construction of a graving dock of concrete and granite, to cost, in all, $1,400,000, $100,000; in all, navy-yard, Pensacola, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 7, before the word "machinery," to strike out "and;" and in the same line, after the word "machinery," to insert "and power plant;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Olongapo, Philippine Islands: Purchase and installation of tools, machinery, and power plant, $100,000.

Mr. KEAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine in regard to this appropriation for the naval station in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, lately I have obtained from the Department reports from naval officers who have inspected this station, and I want to put in the RECORD the report of a very accomplished naval officer, Capt. S. M. Ackley, which was sent to me by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, saying that he inclosed a copy of the report of Captain Ackley, dated June 30, 1905, and it discloses for the first time the real situation at Olongapo. I ask that the letter of the Acting Secretary and Captain Ackley's report be printed in the RECORD—I will not take up the time by reading them now—and also the report of P. L. Reed, civil engineer, United States Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the papers submitted will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington May 28, 1906.

SIR: Agreeably to the request contained in your telegram of the 28th instant, I herewith inclose a copy of the report of Capt. S. M. Ackley, United States Navy, late commandant United States naval station, Olongapo, P. I., dated June 30, 1905, together with a copy of the printed report of the board of officers on the naval station, Olongapo, approved by the Department January 16, 1906; copy of the report of civil engineer, naval station, Olongapo, dated August 30, 1905, submitting outline and plans of the naval station, Olongapo, and a report from the civil engineer, naval station, Olongapo, dated January 17, 1906, relative to the conditions of buildings at the naval station.

Very respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION,
Olongapo, P. I., June 30, 1905.

SIR: 1. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Navy Department's letter No. 11406–78.

2. Referring to paragraph 1, I would say that it is very difficult for anyone to predict when the transfer of the plant from Cavite to Olongapo can be made. I doubt very much whether it can be commenced within the next five years, and it may take longer if the appropriations continue to be as unfortunate in the future as they have been during the past two years. I would respectfully call the Navy Department's attention to the fact that no plans have been furnished by the Department, only blueprints of those of the Taylor board, which, I suppose, the Department expects to follow, although the Bureau of Yards and Docks has not intimated in any way what its views were on this subject. There is a natural sequence that has to be followed in order to economically carry out a plan of this kind, and before permanent buildings can be erected a permanent foundation must be prepared. Judging from the directions of paragraph 1 of the Department's letter, it would appear that it expects to utilize some or all of the buildings of Spanish construction in the present Olongapo Navy-Yard, but I would respectfully call its attention to the fact that none of them correspond with the plan of the Taylor board, and that the level of the dockyard, as designed by the Spaniards, is in some parts less than a foot above high water, and none of it is more than 18 inches above high water.

3. The plan of the Taylor board calls for a level of about 3 feet above extreme high water. Inclosed under separate cover is a blueprint of the dock yard, as left by the Spaniards, with such temporary additions as have been made by the marines stationed in garrison here. An examination of the blueprint of the station as it now exists shows that there are forty-six buildings here in all, enumerating everything that was here at the time of my arrival, November 13, 1904. Of these forty-six buildings, all but eight are occupied and in use by the marine garrison. Of these eight buildings, No. 38 was the residence of the commanding officer in the Spanish days, and is in such bad condition, owing to its faulty construction, that it is no longer tenable. Building No. 39 is in such poor condition, owing to its walls being cracked and its foundation not having been securely built, that it will have to come down in the near future. Building No. 40, used as a coal shed, is already falling down and is beyond even temporary repairs. Buildings Nos. 41 and 42, machine shops, can be repaired for temporary use during the construction of the yard, but are in no way adequate to contain the machinery now installed at the Cavite yard, even if they were to be kept under the adopted plan of the future naval station. Building No. 32, which is a double Spanish building, has been repaired since my taking command, in order that the company of marines quartered there could continue to occupy it. Building No. 28, a Spanish structure of quite substantial construction, has been turned over to us by the marines, and is used by the general storekeeper as a storehouse for articles kept here under the naval supply fund. Building No. 23 is of Spanish construction, and is occupied by a company of marines. Building No. 25, which is a structure of brick and steel, partly finished when we took possession of the station, is now being completed by contract. This is the only building in the yard that probably will be retained in the future. It was the last building commenced by the Spaniards during their régime here, and shows the result of their experience for construction in this climate. I will treat this subject further on.

4. To the west of the navy-yard gate, which is shown in the plan in the corner of wall near building 14, there is a clear, open space, beyond which and extending to the Kalaklan River is the native village of Olongapo, containing three streets for a part of its length running parallel with the water, with a population of about 1,000 people, the most of whom live by working directly or indirectly for the garrison.

5. Referring again to the matter of transfer of plant from Cavite to Olongapo, I would call the Department's attention to the fact that the floor space of all buildings that can be temporarily made use of here is only about 25,000 square feet, whereas the floor space of the working departments at the Cavite yard is about 250,000 square feet, and at Cavite they are very much pressed for room to do the work now required of them, so that to think of transferring the Cavite station to Olongapo until Olongapo is developed on the lines proposed by the Taylor board, or some modification to it, is absolutely impossible.

6. Referring to the second paragraph of the Department's communication, I would state that since the statement of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts was made, on February 28, there has been built by contract a pier for landing and receiving stores, at a cost of about $30,000, and a contract amounting to $7,000 is nearly finished for repairs on building No. 25, to complete and put it in condition for the use of the commandant, the pay officer, the civil engineer, the captain of the yard, telegraph office, and post-office. This building is on iron piers some 4 feet from the ground, and, although it somewhat interferes with the plans of the Taylor board, it could remain in its present position as long as desired.

7. For the future development of the naval station the funds are limited if the scheme of the Taylor board is to be carried out. Particularly is this so in regard to the proposed quay wall. Sixty-three thousand dollars has been appropriated for this work, and the bill limits the price of the wall to $144 per linear foot. After consulting with the various contractors and the civil engineer I have to state that it is not possible to do this work for the amount to which we are confined by the bill. This amount is less than one-half of what is necessary and what a similar quay wall at the Charleston Navy-Yard has cost the Government.

8. The items "Commandant's quarters" and "Three officers' quarters" are only appropriations sufficient to partially construct these buildings, and as the location where they are to stand has to be filled in nearly 3 feet, I consider it absolutely necessary that the filling in be completed and that the appropriations for the completion of this be made, so that the buildings may be designed and completed within the limits of the appropriation.

9. The item "Dredging entrance to basin" can economically be done when a dredging plant is brought here to do some other work. It is not absolutely necessary now, and we have no dredging plant at Manila at the present time.

10. "Dredging basin in front of quay wall" can well be delayed until the dry dock, for which it is intended, is nearer Manila than Baltimore, where it now is.

11. After consultation with the contractor who sunk the artesian well at Cavite, I think we have every reason to believe that artesian water of good quality can be reached here more easily than at Cavite, and that it is advisable, for the best interests of the Government, to sink an artesian well here rather than build necessary reservoirs and install piping for over 2 miles from the Brick Yard Springs. The water at these springs is a surface drainage and is not sufficient to supply the navy-yard during the dry season.

12. The landing pier has already been spoken of.

13. The "coaling plant" is being handled by the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

14. This covers the entire appropriation for the past fiscal year, and I think the Department will agree with me that I have used all the money that a due regard for the best interests of the Government and a reasonable degree of economy would warrant.

15. In regard to paragraph 3 of the Department's letter, I would say that the Department has now come to the question of vital importance in connection with Olongapo Naval Station, for there are certain works that must be done before it is advisable to expend any large amount of funds for others. The vital question, and one on which the Spaniards failed in their plan to develop this place, was to prevent the Santa Rita River from discharging into the basin in front of the naval station. In order that the Department may, perhaps, better understand the conditions here, I will refer them to the map of the Niblack survey of Olongapo, which shows that the valley of the Santa Rita River, on which the navy-yard is located, from the sea, extending back at least 1½ miles, far beyond the limits of the proposed naval station, is a vast mangrove swamp, with the Santa Rita River on the east side and the Kalaklan River on the west side. These rivers gradually come together at a point near the rifle range and about a mile and a half in a direct line from the bay. The bay shore line is a sandy beach, which the sea has thrown up to a height of about 6 feet near the Kalaklan River, where the sea rolls in from the direction of Grande Island, but extending to the east toward the navy-yard the shore is protected by the opposite point, and the crest thrown by the sea is not more than 2 feet above the land behind it. Behind this narrow strip of beach, and extending along the shore for half a mile and back into the mangrove swamp, is the native village, and from the Kalaklan River to the basin in front of the naval station, a distance of 1 mile, all of the land which will be occupied by the proposed naval station is a mangrove swamp, the most of which is covered with 1 foot to 18 inches of water at every high tide. At the present time the Santa Rita River is discharging its water, yellow with sediment after every rain, directly into the basin, where about 4,000,000 cubic yards of silt will have to be removed in order to get a basin large enough for the purposes required by the proposed navy-yard. The Spaniards attempted to close the Santa Rita River where it joins with the Kalaklan, thus diverting the entire volume of the stream down the Kalaklan. In order to carry off the water that flowed into it in the small subsidiary streams, below where they attempted to cut off, a canal was dug about 40 feet wide and 8 feet deep from the Santa Rita west to the Kalaklan. This canal was nearly finished when we took possession here, but above where the two rivers come together and where the Spaniards attempted to cut off the water flow into the Santa Rita the stream broke through and has ever since carried its volume of water down that way, it being nearer the sea level by way of the Santa Rita River than by the Kalaklan, and the largest volume of water goes out by the Santa Rita. Although the Kalaklan is wider than the Santa Rita, the depth of water is not as great. Unfortunately for the success of the operation both banks of the Santa Rita River where it separates from the Kalaklan are alluvial deposits. In my opinion, in order to divert the flow of water into the Kalaklan it will be necessary to carry there several thousand tons of stone and build retaining walls. The nearest point where stone can be obtained is La Lake Hill, at the mouth of the Santa Rita. The hill contains about 280,000 cubic yards of rock, which has to be removed, as the proposed dry dock will be located directly over the hill, it being the only solid foundation within the limits of the proposed navy-yard. This is all plainly set forth on the drawings made by the Taylor Board. In the estimate which I prepared before leaving Washington and left with the Bureau of Yards and Docks I asked for $45,000 for this purpose. Unfortunately, in the meager appropriation of $100,000 which we have for the coming year this item has been omitted. I say unfortunately because in my opinion and the opinion of the admiral and civil engineer it is absolutely essential to demonstrate that this river can be closed and its flood water controlled before it is advisable to spend any large amount of money in other directions toward the development of this naval station.

16. Next in importance to closing the Santa Rita River is the filling in of the great mangrove swamps on which all the larger constructions for the mechanical part of the yard will have to be located. This will be rather a long and expensive operation, as retaining dikes will have to be built to hold up the mud used for this purpose, and it will take some time for this to settle and dry. The foundation of every building that is to carry any weight must be supported by piles sufficiently long to carry their load by friction, as borings show nothing but a mixture of mud and sand to a depth of a hundred feet or more.

17. The building of the sea wall, judging from the progress of similar works the Navy Department has on hand at other places, will require several years.

18. In connection with the matter of contracts for work of this nature, attention is called to the fact that there are only two firms in Manila who have ever undertaken large works of this kind. One is the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Company, with whom the Navy has had an unfortunate experience at Mare Island and Philadelphia, and the other is J. G. White & Co., who have on hand as much as they can carry during this year or more for the insular government, although they expect to bid on the coaling-plant contract.

19. Referring again to the blueprint of the station, I would say that this does not show the temporary quarters that have been constructed for the use of officers of the Navy, but it does show that the marines now necessarily occupy all the habitable buildings on the station except two, the one in use by the general storekeeper to store such articles as must be locked up, and the other, the old Spanish officers' mess house, which is now occupied by the medical officers stationed here.

20. In regard to paragraph 4, I would say that an additional communication will be forwarded in a few days giving a statement of further appropriations desirable, and that, I believe, can be made useful during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Respectfully,

S. M. ACKLEY,
Captain, United States Navy, Commandant.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

(Thro C. in C.)

MAY 29, 1906.

The accompanying copy of a report of the civil engineer, naval station, Olongapo, dated January 17, 1906, addressed to the commandant, naval station, Olongapo, should have accompanied the Department's letter No. 11406–109 of May 29, 1906.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION,
Olongapo, January 17, 1906.

SIR: In accordance with cablegram of October 15, 1905, from the Bureau of Yards and Docks, a survey has been made of the valley of the Tabacujan River with a view to determining whether it would prove a desirable source of water supply for the station. Civil Engineer F. O. Maxson has suggested the development of the water power available in this river, and this feature was also considered.

Tracing No. 96–2, showing the Tabacujan River in its relation to the station, as well as the site for the reservoir back of Kalaklan Point, investigated by the Bureau's direction, is forwarded under separate cover. The reservoir site was described in a letter dated December 5, 1905, with an accompanying plan.

2. The survey as shown on plan was carried to a point about 6 miles from the center of the present station, where the stream forked into two approximately equal branches at an elevation of 815.42 feet above low-water datum.

3. Weir measurements were made on January 4, two months after the end of the rainy season at a point 4,900 feet below the upper limit of the survey, where the flow was 160 cubic feet per minute, and at a point 12,000 feet lower where a flow of 285 cubic feet per minute was recorded. These rates of flow are equivalent to 1,700,000 and 3,100,000 gallons, respectively, in twenty-four hours.

4. It is probable that these figures will be considerably reduced at the end of the dry season, about June 1, but it appears almost certain that a flow exceeding 500 gallons per minute, or 720,000 per day, which has been taken as the maximum requirement of the station, will be found in the lower portion of the river at all times. The weirs were left in place, and readings will be taken from time to time, and the results, especially at the end of the dry season, noted.

5. An elevation of 192 feet above low water is found at a distance of 22,000 feet from the station. An 8-inch pipe, with a friction loss of 3 feet per 1,000, or 66 feet in 22,000, and a velocity of 2½ feet per second would deliver 500,000 gallons per day, reaching the station with a head of 126 feet, which would maintain the level in the 100-foot 100,000-gallon elevated tank which was recommended as the present distributing reservoir for the yard. The intake for this pipe line might be of the simplest construction, there being no present or apparent future necessity for a storage reservoir. Such construction would make it a simple matter if the development of power is not approved to increase the head by carrying the intake further up the valley should future demands exceed what now appears an ample provision or should incrustation in the pipe line similarly increase the loss of head by friction. A head of 100 feet or 43.4 pounds per square inch is believed to be sufficient, as there are no high buildings. A fire pump with salt water inlet and discharging into the mains is suggested in case the elevated tank is not considered sufficient protection against an extensive fire, although the yard buildings should be constructed with the minimum amount of wood on account of white ants, and should be practically fireproof. The tank would supply several fire streams with a fair pressure until the fire pump could be started, when the valves connecting with main supply pipe and tank would be closed and the pressure raised to, perhaps, 100 pounds per square inch. Such rare use of salt water to be later flushed out of the system would have little effect on the pipe and fittings.

6. A distributing reservoir on Kalaklan Hill would involve 7,000 feet of 12 or 16 inch pipe from the reservoir to the center of the station. The ground on the west bank of the Kalaklan is in general steep and rocky, and a location on this side of the river for the pipe line is not considered as favorable as the comparatively flat valley on the east side. A distributing reservoir so located would increase the cost of the supply main and would add a long distributing main of comparatively large diameter, which in itself would cost twice as much as an elevated steel tank of 100,000 gallons erected on the station, involving a crossing of the Kalaklan near its mouth.

It is believed that the cost of such a reservoir and auxiliaries made necessary thereby could be more advantageously applied to increasing the diameter of the main supply pipe and erecting an elevated tank on the station.

The elevated tank would furnish a temporary supply in case of damage to any outlying pipes, which properly conserved would last some days, while a reservoir across the Kalaklan would be comparatively unprotected, and in case of a break in the main distributing pipe, for instance, at its crossing of the Kalaklan in time of flood the station supply would be suddenly shut off, and for an indefinite time.

7. In designing the pipe line the difficulty in obtaining or training men qualified to do what may be described as a "workmanlike job" in any mechanical branch should be borne in mind. A form of cast-iron pipe with finished metal-to-metal joints and without any calking, known as "universal pipe," appears to have several prominent advantages for such conditions, and the price is but little more than ordinary bell and spigot pipe. Consideration of this form of pipe is respectfully recommended.

8. The artesian well under contract is being driven with great difficulty. A depth of 340 feet has been reached with negative results, no potable water having been obtained. It is hoped that this well will provide a supply of suitable water equal to the requirements of the near future.

9. The conditions affecting power development are briefly as follows: The highest point at which the water can be drawn with advantage is at the fork of the river at an elevation of 815.42 feet above low water. This may be discharged at a sufficient elevation to be taken into the water-supply pipe which was assumed in paragraph 5 to be at elevation 192, giving a fall of 623 feet in a distance of 10,000 feet. Taking the flow as measured on January 4 near the inlet, 160 cubic feet per minute, which would flow through a 16-inch pipe with a velocity of 2 feet per second and a loss of head of 1 foot per 1,000, the total loss of head would be 10 feet, leaving 613 for pressure head, which at the above rate of flow would be equivalent to 186 gross horsepower. About 60 per cent of this, or 110 horsepower, could be delivered on the station in the form of electric current by means of a water wheel of the Pelton type, alternating current generator, transformers, and 22,000 feet of line.

10. A dam at the inlet to form a reservoir to increase the dry-season flow has been considered, but does not appear practicable. The dry season lasts fully six months, during which practically no rain falls; the valley rises fairly uniformly at a rate of 6 to 7 feet per 100 in the vicinity of the proposed inlet. Conditions differ but slightly for a long way below this point; there are no natural basins of any extent, and taken altogether the possibility of increasing the flow for several successive months by storage at or near the proposed inlet at a reasonable cost does not seem to exist.

11. The cost of coal and oil consumed in producing 1 horsepower night and day for one year under the conditions here existing may be taken at $100, or for 110 horsepower $11,000. To this coal consumption might be added $10 per horsepower for depreciation of boilers and engines, or $12,100 as the annual cost of producing 110 horsepower on the station. No item for attendance is included, as this power is not sufficient to do away with a steam-power plant on the station, and would involve little or no additional labor.

The cost of 10,000 feet of 16-inch pipe in place may be taken at $30,000, and the cost of power house, water wheel, generator, other electrical apparatus, and transmission line at $20,000, or $50,000 in all. If 10 per cent is assumed for depreciation and repairs and $2,000 per annum for attendance on station and line, the annual cost would be $7,000, which, deducted from $12,100, leaves an apparent saving of $5,100 per annum from the development of this water power.

12. As against this project may be placed the reduced flow of the river at the inlet near the end of the dry season, not yet determined, the isolated position of the plant where superintendence involves 8 miles of travel, the attention and care required to make and maintain the 2 miles of supply pipe tight under pressures running to 250 pounds per square inch, the care required to maintain the high-voltage transmission line, with accompanying danger to life, and the relatively small amount of power available.

It would be possible to design the plant for a larger power, which would be available during four or five months of the year, but such increase of cost would probably be not justified by the advantages to be gained.

13. The Bureau directs in its cablegram that dam sites be surveyed on the Tabacujan River.

The river descends quite uniformly in a rocky channel, strewn with bowlders. No place was found at which a storage reservoir of useful size could be obtained by a dam of reasonable cost. At almost any point a low dam could be constructed which would answer well as an inlet for the water supply, but a valley with approximately parallel sides rises regularly, with a slope of 3 or more feet per 100, offers little opportunity to construct a storage reservoir which shall hold enough water to materially increase the flow over a period of five or six successive months of dry weather.

It is believed that such a reservoir will not be needed, and that the river will supply at all times sufficient water for the needs of the station as they have been foreseen in the complete project of the Olongapo board, of which the late Rear-Admiral Taylor was senior member.

14. An instrumental survey has been made of the area adjoining the "brickyard springs" above the falls, levels determined, and weir measurement made.

These show the top of the falls to be at an elevation of 109 feet above low water and that the bed of the stream rises from there fairly and uniformly to an elevation of 154 feet, above datum in 417 feet where it branches.

A careful weir measurement made on January 8 gave a flow of 5.12 cubic feet per minute, equivalent to 55,000 gallons per day.

A similar measurement, made on February 13, 1905, gave but 1.20 cubic feet per minute, equivalent to 13,000 gallons per day. No place favorable to the construction of a dam to form a useful storage reservoir was found in the steep and narrow valley above the falls. Water from this spring now supplies a 2-inch pipe, which is led to the camp for parties using the target range for small arms, constructed as a permanent range for the Asiatic fleet. This range is used exclusively in the dry season, at which time there remains little or no water from the spring after supplying the camp.

Very respectfully,

P. L. REED,
Civil Engineer, United States Navy.

The COMMANDANT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1906.

SIR: The Bureau forwards herewith, for the information of the supplemental board on the development of the Olongapo Naval Station, a copy of letter and print just received from that station, showing the result of survey made in connection with water supply.

2. It will be noted that a different development is suggested from that proposed by the board as a result of the survey and a study of the conditions.

Very respectfully,

MORDECAI T. ENDICOTT,
Chief of Bureau.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

[First indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 28, 1906.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS:

Forwards, for the information of the supplemental board on the development of the Olongapo Naval Station, a copy of a letter from Civil Engineer P. L. Reed, United States Navy, dated January 17, 1906; also a print, showing the result of survey made in connection with water supply.

Respectfully referred to the board on Olongapo Naval Station, of which Capt. William Swift, United States Navy, is senior member, for consideration.

BONAPARTE, Secretary.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Navigation.

Forwarded March 1, 1906.
To Capt. William Swift, United States Navy.

[Second indorsement.]

BOARD ON OLONGAPO, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
March 15, 1906.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS:

Forwards, for the information of the supplemental board on the development of the Olongapo Naval Station, a copy of a letter from Civil Engineer P. L. Reed, United States Navy, dated January 17, 1906; also a print, showing the result of survey made in connection with water supply.

Respectfully returned to the Department.

The results of observations made by Civil Engineer Reed at Olongapo on the possibility of water power developed for that station furnish good ground for belief that for more than half the year, at least, water power will be available.

2. It may be possible that the water power will have to be supplemented by steam in an auxiliary plant, but the board prefers to defer judgment on this point until further and more complete observations are available, and until Civil Engineer Reed has assimilated the proposed scheme of water-power development in the board's report. The report should have reached Olongapo the last of February.

3. In view of the fact that Civil Engineer Reed can, after reading the report of this board, make more intelligent observations and recommendations on this subject, the board recommends that further investigation be made as to the flow of water in the upper part of the Tabacujan at different times of the year. It seems also likely that there will be ample time for more complete observations and for conclusions based upon them.

WM. SWIFT,
Captain, United States Navy, Senior Member.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Navigation.

Forwarded March 15, 1906.

[Third indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 16, 1906.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS:

Forwards, for the information of the supplemental board on the development of the Olongapo Naval Station, a copy of a letter from Civil Engineer P. L. Reed, United States Navy, dated January 17, 1906; also a print, showing the result of survey made in connection with water supply.

Respectfully returned to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, inviting attention to the second indorsement hereon of the senior member of the board on Olongapo, recommending that further investigation be made as to the flow of water in the upper part of the Tabacujan at different times of the year, in connection with the general question on the possibility of water-power development for the naval station, Olongapo, which recommendation is approved.

BONAPARTE, Secretary.

Mr. HALE. I would, upon the strength of these reports, move to strike out the provisions for Olongapo, but they are so small that they will probably be used at the station in its present condition. However, I think it a matter of congratulation that at last reports disclose what is the real situation of this station.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Is there not a large amount, which has been appropriated heretofore, standing to the credit of Olongapo which could be expended unless otherwise directed?

Mr. HALE. It will not be expended. The Comptroller has held it up——

Mr. WARREN. Then am I to understand that nothing will be available for Olongapo except what is carried in this bill?

Mr. HALE. That is all.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad this information has been received.

Mr. HALE. I, too, am very glad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 38, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for public works, navy-yards and stations, from $2,848,450 to $3,005,450.

Mr. HALE. On page 39, line 1, after the word "million," I move to strike out "five" and insert "fifty-two;" so as to read "$3,052,450."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 13, on page 44.

Mr. HALE. On page 44, line 11, I move to strike out "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Steam Engineering," on page 62, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert "to outfit boiler shop, now building, with cranes, annealing furnace, machine and hand tools, motors and fixtures, $60,000; in all, $110,000;" so as to make the clause read:

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Naval Academy from $388,663.08 to $389,060.58.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 71, to insert:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as possible after the 1st day of June of each year preceding the final graduation of midshipmen in the succeeding year, notify in writing each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress of any vacancy that will exist at the Naval Academy because of such graduation, and which he shall be entitled to fill by nomination of a candidate and one or more alternates therefor. The nomination of a candidate and alternate or alternates to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate, if such recommendation is made by the 15th day of April of the year following that in which said notice in writing is given, but if it is not made by that time the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy by appointment of an actual resident of the State, Congressional district, or Territory, as the case may be, in which the vacancy will exist, who shall have been for at least two years immediately proceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of the State, Congressional district, or Territory in which the vacancy will exist and of the legal qualification under the law as now provided. In cases where by reason of a vacancy in the membership of the Senate or House of Representatives, or by the death or declination of a candidate for admission to the academy there occurs or is about to occur at the academy a vacancy from any State, district, or Territory that can not be filled by nomination as herein provided, the same may be filled as soon thereafter and before the final entrance examination for the year as the Secretary of the Navy may determine. The candidates allowed for the District of Columbia and all the candidates appointed at large, together with alternates therefor, shall be selected by the President within the period herein prescribed for nomination of other candidates: Provided, That the President may select a candidate for the District of Columbia for the year 1908.

Mr. HALE. To perfect the amendment, I move, in line 3, page 71, before the word "graduation," to strike out the word "final."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In lines 11 and 12 I move to strike out the words "fifteenth day of April" and insert "fourth day of March."

Mr. CLAY. What change will that make in the present arrangement?

Mr. HALE. It would be an embarrassment if it runs over the 4th of March, when Congress expires, because a question would then arise between the new Member and the old Member, and as it is only a few days——

Mr. CLAY. What change will this amendment, if adopted, make in the present arrangement?

Mr. HALE. Oh, it gives more time for Senators and Members. They have now only about three months, and there is not the opportunity for a Senator or Representative to select his man and have time for him to prepare and get ready for the examination. The same provision was substantially adopted in regard to West Point. It gives to every Senator and Member a longer time—that is, instead of awaiting the expiration of the year he is notified of the coming vacancy.

Mr. CLAY. I have never known the Navy Department heretofore to fill a vacancy that was not filled by a Member of the House or a Senator. They usually notify them three or four times if they do not make the appointment, and if they fail they notify them again. I know the Department is exceedingly careful if the appointment is not made to notify Senators and Representatives again, and then if the person appointed fails to stand the examination, to notify again and let another appointment be made.

Mr. HALE. They have now only three or four months to do it in, and they will have all the time from the preceding year.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 10, to insert:

That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint two additional professors of mathematics in the Navy, who shall take rank at the foot of the list of professors of mathematics and be extra numbers in said list.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator will allow this amendment to go over for a few minutes until it may be looked into further.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 15, to insert:

That all records (such as muster and pay rolls and reports) relating to the personnel and operations of public and private armed vessels of the North American colonies in the war of the Revolution now in any of the Executive Departments shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy, to be preserved, indexed, and prepared for publication.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 18, after the word "bars," to insert "and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice, both afloat and ashore," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law; and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice, both afloat and ashore, $1,883,555.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 9, to insert:

That from and after the date of the approval of this act, the Commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general in the Army, and when a vacancy shall occur in the office of commandant of the corps, on the expiration of the service of the present incumbent, by retirement or otherwise, the Commandant of the Marine Corps shall thereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator from Maine, in charge of this bill, if that amendment is not something unusual?

Mr. HALE. It was done in the case of the predecessor, who was a very competent and valuable officer, but the main reason for it is that the Marine Corps, by the constant increases that Congress has made, has run up from 2,000 to 9,000 men. It is almost as large as a corps. The commandant has more responsibility than any major-general in the Army. Instead of making it permanent the committee reported the amendment, as was done in General Heywood's case, that it be made applicable only to the present incumbent. I think it ought to be permanent, the corps has become so large; but the committee did not report it in that way.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is limited to him it is well deserved.

Mr. HALE. It is well deserved.

Mr. CLAY. That may be true, but it is a bad practice to legislate in the interest of a particular person in office. We ought to legislate generally, and not for any particular person. It is a bad precedent, and I do not believe we ought to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a precedent. We have been doing it in the Army now for a long while.

Mr. CLAY. I am not prepared to say that we ought to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. Here is a man who has a splendid record for gallantry and intelligence and force.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill and read to line 13, on page 82, the last item read being as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract or in navy-yards as hereinafter provided—

One first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armament and armor, not exceeding $6,000,000: Provided, That before approving any plans or specifications for the construction of such battle ship the Secretary of the Navy shall afford, by advertisement or otherwise, in his discretion, a reasonable opportunity to any competent constructor who may desire so to do, to submit plans and specifications for his consideration, for which said plans, should the same be used by the Department and be not submitted by or on behalf of a successful bidder for the contract, such compensation shall be paid as the Secretary of the Navy shall deem just and equitable out of the amount herein appropriated under the head "Contingent, Navy."

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether that item for an increase of the Navy is in the usual form? It seems to me that it does not exactly conform to the regular way that increases for the Navy have been made. The question is whether the text should not be amended in some way so as to make it more specific.

Mr. HALE. In providing for new battle ships Congress has always heretofore exercised its discretion and has provided limitations as to displacement and as to size, so that the Department has taken its guidance from the limitations fixed by Congress. In this case there is no limitation of any kind whatever in the bill, if that is what the Senator refers to.

Mr. KEAN. That is what I refer to. There is no limitation as to the draft of the ship, or anything of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Nor as to displacement.

Mr. KEAN. I notice a very interesting table in the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs giving the draft of some foreign battle ships, the depth of the Suez Canal, the depth to which the Panama Canal is proposed to be built, and also the depth of various harbors existing and projected.

Mr. WARREN. The provision does seem to be restrictive, however, in that the new battle ship must carry "as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class."

Mr. KEAN. That is the only description I see of the vessel.

Mr. HALE. That is not exactly a restriction. It is an enlargement.

Mr. WARREN. It is an enlargement; but it is restrictive in one sense, because the Department can not accept anything that is lighter for the armor or armament.

Mr. KEAN. How are we to know what is the idea to be carried out?

Mr. WARREN. I am hoping that the Senator from New Jersey will find out.

Mr. KEAN. I am trying to find out from the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is a very general provision without any kind of limitation that the House has put in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think it is too loosely drawn?

Mr. HALE. It is pretty loosely drawn, there is no doubt. Of course this could be done. If the ship is to be so enormous it will take six months or perhaps more for the plans to be made. It is to be a structure so entirely different from anything that has been authorized heretofore that the Department has to make plans and give measurements and to form a complete scheme. The contest had been made in the House and was carried there by a large majority in favor of the ship. The only thing that could be done would be to provide that at the next session of Congress, before any bids are offered to be received, the Secretary of the Navy shall submit to Congress what would cover the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Wyoming—a plan giving in detail what the Department proposes with this ship, which will cost when she is completed somewhere from $10,000,000 to $11,000,000.

Mr. CLAY. Right there I shall be glad to ask the Senator what amount have we paid for battle ships heretofore? How much did we pay for the Oregon? I believe the Oregon cost us more than any other ship we built, did it not?

Mr. HALE. No. The Oregon was of the class of 10,000 or 11,000 ton ships, and she cost about half as much as this ship will cost.

Mr. CLAY. Have we ever heretofore built a battle ship that cost exceeding six and a half million dollars?

Mr. HALE. The last four which were provided for will cost about $7,000,000, including the armament.

Mr. CLAY. This is to cost six millions, not including the armament.

Mr. HALE. Yes. This will cost—so it has been stated to us—when completed, armor and armament, all of which is left indefinite, somewhere from ten to eleven million dollars.

Mr. CLAY. I understood that at the last session of Congress the naval committees of both the House and Senate adopted the policy of building two battle ships a year; and I remember the Senator from Maine stated during the last session of Congress that this year we would try to adopt the policy of building one battle ship a year. If that be true, while we have reduced the number of battle ships from two to one, the fact is that this one battle ship will cost about as much as two battle ships have cost heretofore. Then there really has been no decrease in the expenditure.

Mr. HALE. I do not see any other way to meet the suggestion than to provide that before any bids shall be invited or received the Secretary of the Navy shall report at the next session of Congress the plans and specifications for such battle ships, including their displacement, draft, dimensions, etc.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator from Maine would offer an amendment of that kind. As the provision now stands it reads:

Provided, That before approving any plans or specifications for the construction of such battle ship the Secretary of the Navy shall afford, by advertisement or otherwise, in his discretion, a reasonable opportunity to any competent constructor who may desire so to do, to submit plans and specifications.

It would seem as if pretty much all of the time between now and the opening of the next session of Congress would be consumed in that way. I think it would not very much delay the ultimate outcome, and it certainly would put it nearer the control of Congress if the Senator from Maine would amend that section in the manner he has indicated, so that it might come back to Congress for final approval.

Mr. HALE. Then I would move to add, on page 82, at the end of line 13, after the word "Navy," this proviso:

Provided, That before any proposals for said battle ship shall be issued or any bids received and accepted, the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress at its next session full details covering any plans and specifications for such battle ship, including its displacement, draft, and dimensions, and the kind and extent of armor and armament therefor.

That will meet the objection raised by Senators, and I think it is a very good amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The SECRETARY. On page 82, line 13, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That before any proposals for said battle ship shall be issued or any bids received and accepted, the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress at its next session full details covering any plans and specifications for such battle ship, including its displacement, draft, and dimensions, and the kind and extent of armor and armament therefor.

Mr. HALE. I do not want the Secretary to report the detailed plans. I suppose those words will have to be stricken out. I wish the Secretary would again read that part of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress at its next session full details covering any plans and specifications——

Mr. HALE. Covering the type of such battle ship.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the first two or three lines of the amendment. Does he propose to strike out the plans?

Mr. HALE. Leave out "plans," so that it will provide for the type of ship.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment which has just been stated?

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment may be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That before any proposals for said battle ship shall be issued, or any bids received and accepted, the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress at its next session full details, covering the type of such specifications for such battle ship——

Mr. HALE. No; that will not do. It should read "covering the type of such battle ship and the specifications," so that we may see what kind of a ship it is proposed to build.

Mr. SPOONER. We must have the plans and specifications, for they are called for in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Unless this amendment cuts them out. I wish to call attention of the Senator from Maine to the first part of the amendment in reference to the submission of proposals. That seems a good provision.

Mr. HALE. I think it is a wholesome provision. Of course, the theory of this is that the Secretary goes on and makes his plans. He has to do that. I do not know that I want him to submit detailed plans; but before he issues any proposal it will be necessary to have plans.

Mr. WARREN. This clause will provide that he receives proposals before he submits plans.

Mr. HALE. I do not want him to do that.

Mr. WARREN. No; but you want to authorize him to ask for a submission of plans.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; I do not propose to strike that out.

Mr. WARREN. The only question is, whether the first two lines of the amendment as stated do not cut that out.

Mr. HALE. No; that does not apply to that. It only applies to the ship itself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That before any proposals for said battle ship shall be issued, or any bids received and accepted, the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress, at its next session, full details covering the type of such battle ship and the specifications for the same, including its displacement, draught, and dimensions, and the kind and extent of armor and armament therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if I understand the purpose of this provision, it really marks the beginning of a new era, or rather, I should say, a new departure in the character of vessels of war to be constructed by this Government. I suppose we all understand the fact that the influence which has brought about the provision for the construction of this monster battle ship is the information which we have had as to the construction of a similar ship by one of the great naval powers of Europe. I desire the opinion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on that proposition.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will excuse me. I was interrupted, and did not catch his remark.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator can not listen to two Senators at the same time. I do not criticise him for his failure to do so.

What I wanted to say was that our action in this matter, I presume, is based upon the assumption that a ship of this class is so superior in its power to the ships of a lower class that if one nation has a ship of this description those who may be called upon to cope with that nation must have vessels of the same class. If that suggestion were limited in its application to one or two ships, it would be a comparatively insignificant matter, but the point about which I want to ask the Senator's suggestion is this: Whether if it is recognized that ships of this class are so much more powerful than ships of another class, that recognition will not involve necessarily in the future not simply the construction of one great battle ship, but practically the discarding of all ships of a minor class and in the future the furnishing of our Navy practically with vessels of this class? I do not know whether or not the Senator has been able to hear me, because he has been so frequently interrupted by others during the time I have been speaking.

Mr. HALE. I think I see clearly what the Senator has in mind. One reason why the amendment which has been agreed to is a good one is that before anything final is done about this ship——

Mr. BACON. The Senator is not directing his attention to what I stated at all. I said nothing about the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I shall come to that presently.

Before anything final is done and before we enter upon the construction of this ship we shall, under the terms of the amendment, have it reported to us how large this ship is intended to be and what her dimensions are to be before Congress acts in appropriating. We shall also have the benefit of the time between now and next December in seeing what is developed in other nations. Some of them propose to experiment in the direction of these big ships. I do not think that any of them have gone further than an 18,000-ton ship, but the design of the Department in this case is a 20,000 or a 21,000 ton ship—away beyond what any other nation has proposed. Just how that immense size and increase of size will be taken we will know in December, and Congress will be then better prepared to say what it will do beyond that on the very question raised by the Senator, which is a very grave question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will wait until I answer the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well.

Mr. HALE. If we built a 20,000-ton or a 21,000-ton ship—which is enormous and beyond what anybody anywhere else has thought about—it will be a question whether we shall embark in a scheme by which all subsequent vessels that we build shall be of that kind, therefore making obsolete those which we have already built, and we shall be in a better condition to meet that question next December, when we will see just what the Department proposes to do as to this enormous ship. At present we do not know.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, from what the Senator now says, while this authority is given to the Secretary of the Navy, it is not understood that the Government is so thoroughly committed to the construction of this vessel but that if between now and next December the committee, over which the Senator so ably presides, will be able to bring to the attention of the Senate reasons why it should not be constructed, there would be time to call a halt?

Mr. HALE. All that will be left to Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I will in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me until I finish my sentence. I want to say to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that I am very much gratified by his statement, because I have been impressed with the importance of this matter, not as concerning this particular ship, but as to the tremendous departure upon which we have entered, if this is determined upon as the type of ship which we are compelled to have in order to cope with other nations who construct similar ships. Now, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Maine if the delay involved in this amendment makes it somewhat problematical as to whether or not this ship will be finally ordered, what is the particular need of an appropriation now?

Mr. HALE. There is not any appropriation now.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is $6,000,000 appropriated for this ship of the type of the Dreadnought.

Mr. HALE. That is a limitation exclusive of armor and armament. It will cost nearly twice that, including those items.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know, but the Senator well understands—because he and I have often discussed this question together in the Naval Committee—that it seems to be the ambition of the board of officers who plan our vessels to outdo themselves every succeeding year. They grow bigger and bigger, until, I am afraid, they will become like the frog who tried to equal the ox, and burst after a while by swelling. It appears that there ought to be some stopping place in this matter of naval construction, some limit of utility and common sense, beyond which the Congress would ask the Navy Department to halt.

We have read of battles between whales and swordfish. I have read such stories, as every man here has, and we know how much trouble the great leviathan had in battling with a school of swordfish. That simile occurs to me as an illustration of the inutility, the uselessness, and the dangerous condition into which a great ship like this might be if a lot of torpedo boats or submarines or other destructive agencies, or even smaller vessels having equally good guns that could pierce her armor or pierce her hull, should be her adversaries.

There is in an immense ship such as is contemplated such an immense amount of money involved and so many lives involved that I think it is time the question ought to be seriously considered by Congress whether we ought not to demand of the Navy Department that they shall halt, not in the proper and legitimate expansion of the Navy, but in its excessive growth. It seems to me we are getting a navy that is about as large as we can well afford to keep going. Whenever we shall have completed the vessels now ordered, the naval appropriation bill will run up to $50,000,000 more than is required now; and the ambition of naval officers to continue to grow and grow and expand, to emulate Germany and to emulate England and to outdo them, to my mind is reprehensible. It is incumbent upon us here to indicate that we do not approve of this policy, and that, while we are willing always to vote the money necessary to give us a navy commensurate with the needs of the country, we have very nearly reached that point, and we do not want this great big $10,000,000 vessel which a little rock might destroy. Senators will recollect that four or five of these battle ships ran aground and came near sinking each other in New York Harbor only this last winter; and we have recently had a disaster in the shape of an explosion in a turret of one of our battle ships. Our naval officers appear to be very careless in handling these costly vessels or very unfortunate or something—I do not know what is the matter—and we will either have to begin to check up on this kind of construction or we will have to increase the efficiency of those handling these ships, else it will be a very costly lesson we will have learned after a while.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. All the considerations presented by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I think, are met by the amendment to which the Senate has agreed. I do not think anybody wants to now increase the naval establishment over and beyond what we have and will have when the ships now building are completed. It has been a sort of understanding that one ship a year should be provided to take the place of the ships that will go out of commission as they reach that point in the natural life of ships when they have to be retired.

When we get, Mr. President, the American Navy as it will be when the ships now building are completed, it will be in effectiveness the second navy in the world. It will not be as large as the French navy, but our ships will be better, more modern, more useful, more potent, and terrible engines of war, should there ever be war. I do not think that we need to increase their number, but only to provide for keeping the Navy up by constructing perhaps a ship a year.

What type of ship that shall be I do not think we are prepared to say. We might strike out this provision entirely and do nothing; but I do not think that would be very wise, inasmuch as it has passed the House of Representatives, after full debate, and has had put upon it the amendment agreed to by the Senate, which defers final action until next winter. That course will not delay anything, because the plans for a ship of this kind involve such an immense labor that I fancy the Secretary of the Navy, with all his officers, will have to whip up his force to get ready a report to us in December as to just what kind of a ship shall be built. Then we can settle the question whether we are going into the building of these prodigious ships, and, if so, how far and to what extent.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am gratified that there is this much time reserved by Congress for examination and calm conclusion to be reached. At the same time I am very free to confess that I have very little hope but what the result will be that the construction of this ship will be determined upon. I have every confidence in the conservatism of the honorable Senator who is chairman of the Naval Committee [Mr. HALE], and I know that if it is possible to reconcile the omission to build this ship with what may be considered the public needs, the ship will not be built.

The serious feature connected with it, to my mind, is the one which I have already suggested. Of course I recognize the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, which has been agreed to by the Senate and which has been ingrafted upon the bill, is as far as we can go now in conserving what may be to our interest in the future; but, if the argument upon which the construction of this ship is based is that the fact of a similar ship or of similar ships being constructed by other nations makes us unable to cope with those nations unless we have ships of similar magnitude and power, the consequences to flow from that conclusion are immense and appalling. The argument must be based upon the suggestion already made that our ships would be unable to cope with ships of that class; otherwise it would not be necessary to build a ship to cope with such ships. If that conclusion is recognized as a correct one, it must follow that all the ships we now have will in a short time be obsolete.

I recollect, Mr. President—it has been but a few years ago—when the Senator from Maine, in charge of the naval appropriation bill, then as now spoke of the proposition to construct an $8,000,000 ship. The largest type before that was a $6,000,000 ship; and the Senator from Maine deprecated the construction of an $8,000,000 ship. That was then considered as the largest, that was the ne plus ultra, something beyond which we would not go; yet in two or three years we stand confronted with a proposition that almost 50 per cent in point of magnitude and expense must be added to the type of our naval vessels.

Of course, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the time is only distant a little in the future when this $11,000,000 ship will be considered to be too small to cope with the even larger battle ships which other nations will construct.

Mr. TILLMAN. We will have $15,000,000 ships.

Mr. BACON. We will have $15,000,000 ships to keep up with the ships which some other nation will construct.

I confess that the problem suggested is one very difficult of solution. We ought, of course, to be prepared to hold our own, to have a naval strength capable for all our needs; but whether or not anything beyond that is necessary is a grave question. If it is not necessary, the future in the matter of naval construction, in the sacrifice of what has already been constructed, and in the tremendous expense in the creation of new navies, one after the other, as these developments come in succession, is truly, I repeat, appalling.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it is true—and I have made some inquiries in regard to the subject—that we have to-day fewer obsolete ships in our Navy than has any country in the world. The fact is, I think, that to-day there is only one ship—I am speaking now of those ships which constitute the backbone of the Navy, which constitute the Navy, the battle ships and armored cruisers—I think there is only one to-day that would be called obsolete and that the Department would be glad to withdraw, and that is the Texas, which was built on English plans. I repeat we have fewer obsolete ships than any other country in the world. We have built and are building a naval force which will stand third in numbers and tonnage, and, as the Senator from Maine has said—and I quite agree with his belief—it will be second in point of fighting efficiency.

The Navy is large enough. All that is necessary for us to do is to maintain it at the high point of efficiency and perfection which it has now reached. We want to have the force, the instrument, as perfect as possible.

The very large ships, of which England has launched one, and, I believe, Germany is planning for two, are, I suppose, to a great extent experimental. I think there are differences of opinion as to their value even among naval experts themselves. But I do believe that in order to keep our force at the highest point of efficiency, it is necessary for us to make an experiment in that direction. I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken in saying that, even if ships of this large size—18,000 or 20,000 tons—should prove successful and all that their advocates expect, it would render obsolete the other ships in the Navy. We have to-day in the Navy ships of 10,000 tons, of the Oregon class, and ships of 16,000 tons, of the Connecticut class.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts pardon me? I do not wish to be understood as suggesting that they would immediately become obsolete.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. BACON. I mean that as soon as the navies of other countries are filled with the larger class of ships our present ships would be unable to cope with them, and would thus become obsolete.

Mr. LODGE. The Oregon, the Massachusetts, and the Indiana, which were our first three battle ships, are to-day, despite their inferior speed and despite their low free board, which I regard now as an admitted mistake in design, with their heavy guns, perfectly fit to take their place in the line of battle. I say that on the authority of some excellent naval officers, whose judgment, I believe, would command universal respect. They are well armored, and they carry heavy guns, and the fact that we have some 16,000-ton vessels just coming off the stocks now and going into commission does not render those ships useless at all.

The Senator from South Carolina referred to the carelessness of our officers. I do not think they are to be blamed, although there may have been carelessness in one recent instance. But those accidents and mishaps are likely to happen in any navy. It is only a few days ago that one of the new battle ships of the English navy, the Montague, was held up on a perfectly well known rock in Bristol Channel and was seriously if not fatally injured. I believe we are pursuing exactly the right policy. We have reached the number of ships which is sufficient. I do not think we ought to have any further expansion in numbers at present, certainly. But I do think that it is all essential that we should maintain our present force of battle ships at the highest stage of efficiency, and as we supply the loss year by year we should supply it by ships of the very best and most modern type. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine will certainly save us from any undue committal to this policy. But I believe myself that it is a sound one, and that Congress will adopt the House provision when the time comes.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to make another inquiry of him?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If this particular type of ship should be deemed essential or if it should be deemed to go beyond the experimental stage, do I understand the Senator to be of the opinion that hereafter that is the type of ship which we should construct in keeping up the Navy?

Mr. LODGE. That it is impossible for anyone to answer; but my judgment would be that the one ship we need a year—and I see no reason to build more—to supply loss and wearing out should be of the most successful type. If the large ship is found to be best, I suppose the new ships as they are built would be of the large type in preference to the small one.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him another question, as he has been giving this matter careful thought and investigation. The Senator speaks of this type of ship as being experimental. I should like to get the suggestion of the Senator as to what will determine the question; what will be the develpoment which will put it beyond the experimental stage? Anything short of experience in battle?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I think short of experience in battle. They can tell whether it is advantageous to have ships of this very large size, which, of course, carry heavier armaments of guns than the other ships carry, or whether a ship of 2,000 or 3,000 tons less is on the whole better. I think that can be told without going to the extreme of battle. But it is to be noted that the Japanese, who have had the largest experience and the latest in the management of battle ships and torpedo destroyers, are building large armored ships, and I think their judgment is as good and as recent as anybody's.

Mr. BACON. The question whether or not a ship of a certain type is efficient can be determined in time of peace, so far as speed is concerned and so far as power of guns is concerned, but the actual experiment which will test the question whether it is desirable or not can only be determined in battle.

Mr. LODGE. A great deal can be done by maneuvering, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests, and by testing the speed.

We led the world in building a battle ship of 16,000 tons. We began the building of big ships, and the success of that policy has been demonstrated. However, I know there is a division of opinion as to whether it is better to go beyond that, and that point can only be settled by trying at least one ship. If we wish to keep up, as we do, I think, the highest efficiency, it seems to me it is the part of wisdom to build this ship and make our own experiment with it. The Japanese opinion, which I regard as perhaps the best opinion in the world at this moment, certainly is that the armored battle ship is the essential feature of the navy.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not been able to discover the information, although it may exist somewhere; but have we had these battle ships, or has any nation had them, sufficiently long to know within reasonable limits what is the life of one of them? The Senator speaks of one a year, taking the place of those that go out by the limitation of its life or usefulness.

Mr. LODGE. There are casualties and there is the natural wearing out. We have not one that has become obsolete. I was very much pleased to hear that the Oregon and the Indiana and the Massachusetts, although considered now of inferior type, are regarded as perfectly effective vessels to put in line of battle. They were built fifteen years ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not think we have any that are obsolete.

Mr. LODGE. Not one.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have vessels that are not up to the latest type.

Mr. LODGE. We have not a single obsolete vessel in what we may call the fighting line of the American Navy. The Texas was a poor one.

Mr. TILLMAN. And yet the Texas behaved very beautifully at Santiago.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but she is of very inferior speed. That is due to defects in construction. She is not worn out. On these vessels that I have referred to considerable money has been spent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Have we not been spending a great deal of money on them every year or two?

Mr. LODGE. No; the Senator is mistaken. A large amount has been spent on them within the last year, because they have been done over, but before that there was nothing but the ordinary and usual repairs. They were extremely well built.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask a question. With the number now in the neighborhood of thirty—twenty-seven, I believe it is—will building one a year be sufficient to keep the Navy at that standard? In other words, in order to arrive at that determination we must find out what is the average life of a battle ship. We have to make some little allowance for casualties, disasters—a ship getting sunk, or something like that. I want to know, if anyone is able to tell me—I have not been able to find out—what is the average life of one of these ships with steel hulls?

Mr. LODGE. The three that were authorized in 1890 have been refitted and done over this year.

Mr. TILLMAN. But their hulls were not done over.

Mr. LODGE. No; their hulls were not, and they, we know, have had a life of eleven or twelve years certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are they not now just about as efficient as ever?

Mr. LODGE. They are as efficient as they ever were. We have improved the type——

Mr. TILLMAN. Are they not likely to last another fifteen years with another doing over?

Mr. LODGE. That of course I can not say.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator know anything about the life of English battle ships? England went into this business before we did, and has older ships than ours.

Mr. LODGE. England has many ships not fit to go into the fighting line, because they are armored with the compound iron plates, inferior plates. Our vessels are armored with the very best plates as a rule. In fact, we have no compound iron-armored plates. I do not know how many ships in the English navy can be said to be obsolete. I am satisfied that one ship a year will enable us to maintain our Navy in its present efficiency.

Mr. HALE. On page 72 I move to strike out lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, and insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, in lieu of the proposed amendment of the committee in lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, it is proposed to insert:

That the President be authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional professors of mathematics in the Navy, who shall have extra numbers in said list and who shall take rank therein according to that held by them, respectively, when so appointed, if such appointees are officers of the Navy, otherwise at the foot of said list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The only amendment left is on page 7. After the amendment which has been agreed to there I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 6, after the word "rank," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That when such office becomes vacant the solicitor shall thereafter be appointed from civil life in the manner and at the compensation now provided by law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Increase of the Navy," on page 84, line 16, before the word "tests," to strike out "competitive;" and in line 19, before the word "tests," to strike out "competitive;" in the same line, before the word "months," to strike out "twelve" and insert "nine;" and in line 20, after the word "act," to insert "and for such purpose the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated;" so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase subsurface or submarine torpedo boats to an amount not exceeding $1,000,000, after such tests as he shall see fit to prescribe to determine the comparative efficiency of the different boats for which bids may be submitted: Provided, That such tests shall take place within nine months from the date of the passage of this act; and for such purpose the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to agreeing to the amendment, but if I caught the reading of it correctly, it is a contract for $1,000,000, authorized by the House of Representatives, but it seems by the way this is printed——

Mr. HALE. We put the money in.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House forgot it.

Mr. KEAN. That is the reason for the increase of a million dollars?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir. The House sought to keep the figures down by leaving out the appropriation.

Mr. KEAN. But they wanted the boats.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 85, line 5, I move to strike out the words "herein authorized."

The SECRETARY. On page 85, line 5, after the word "vessels," it is proposed to strike out the words "herein authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 85, line 9, to increase the appropriation for the total increase of the Navy from $32,975,829 to $33,975,829.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85 line 14, after the word "given," to insert "herein;" so as to make the clause read:

That no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used for any expense of the Navy Department at Washington unless specific authority be given for such expenditure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Naval station, Hawaii: For the reclamation of that portion of the naval station at Honolulu, Hawaii, known as the "Reef," from materials now being dredged from the harbor at Honolulu, and for the necessary dikes or retaining walls, $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call attention to page 15, lines 23 and 24. The bill as it passed the House provided "toward the accumulation of a reserve supply of powder and shell, $1,000,000." On motion of the committee, the Senate has stricken out "one million" and inserted "two million three hundred thousand" dollars—more than double the appropriation for that item. There ought to be some explanation of it.

Mr. HALE. The Department asked for $4,600,000, and the Secretary appeared before the committee and showed that we are very hard up with reference to powder and shell and in a condition where we may at any time find ourselves without any supplies or stores. The committee did not give what the Secretary and the Department asked for, but after the fashion of appropriation bills and other things, we split the difference and gave them half that they asked. That applies also to reserve guns.

Mr. CLAY. The Senate has doubled the House appropriation.

Mr. HALE. It does not in any way meet what they want, but it gives them a reasonable sum. We have to have powder and shells and guns, and Senators must remember that the naval establishment is on the highroad to more and more expense all the time. Every ship we launch requires to have a force of men, and it costs all the way from half a million to three-quarters of a million to run it. We must have powder and shells and guns and everything of that kind. Some day or other the country will appreciate what Congress is doing for the Navy and how immense the sums are that we are giving and how immense the sums must be to keep up this great Navy of ours. The committee has dealt with it as well as it could. The House struck down a good many items. The Senate has increased hardly any items. These are the only ones of any size that the Senate has increased, and instead of giving the Department all they wanted we give them half.

Mr. DICK. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the pay and allowances of chaplains shall be the same, rank for rank, as is or may be provided by law for officers of the line and of the Medical and Pay Corps, all of whom shall hereafter receive the same pay on shore duty as is now provided for sea duty: And provided further, That the present pay and allowances of any officer now in the Navy shall not be reduced.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment to be inserted immediately following the amendment just agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act the pay and allowances of civil engineers and professors of mathematics in the Navy shall be the same as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for naval constructors, and the pay and allowances of assistant civil engineers the same as for assistant naval constructors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FORAKER. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment, and while I was out, on page 72, an amendment was considered which I should like to have time to read. [After a pause.] In view of the explanation made to me I will not offer the amendment I had in hand to offer.

Mr. HALE. I think that is all right.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF MEAT PRODUCTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

The Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of Mr. James Bronson Reynolds and Commissioner Charles P. Neill, the special committee whom I appointed to investigate into the conditions in the stock yards of Chicago and report thereon to me. This report is of a preliminary nature. I submit it to you now because it shows the urgent need of immediate action by the Congress in the direction of providing a drastic and thoroughgoing inspection by the Federal Government of all stock yards and packing houses and of their products, so far as the latter enter into interstate or foreign commerce. The conditions shown by even this short inspection to exist in the Chicago stock yards are revolting. It is imperatively necessary in the interest of health and of decency that they should be radically changed. Under the existing law it is wholly impossible to secure satisfactory results.

When my attention was first directed to this matter an investigation was made under the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture. When the preliminary statements of this investigation were brought to my attention they showed such defects in the law and such wholly unexpected conditions that I deemed it best to have a further immediate investigation by men not connected with the Bureau, and accordingly appointed Messrs. Reynolds and Neill. It was impossible under the existing law that satisfactory work should be done by the Bureau of Animal Industry. I am now, however, examining the way in which the work actually was done.

Before I had received the report of Messrs. Reynolds and Neill I had directed that labels placed upon any package of meat food products should state only that the carcass of the animal from which the meat was taken had been inspected at the time of slaughter. If inspection of meat food products at all stages of preparation is not secured by the passage of the legislation recommended I shall feel compelled to order that inspection labels and certificates on canned products shall not be used hereafter.

The report shows that the stock yards and packing houses are not kept even reasonably clean, and that the method of handling and preparing food products is uncleanly and dangerous to health. Under existing law the National Government has no power to enforce inspection of the many forms of prepared meat food products that are daily going from the packing houses into interstate commerce. Owing to an inadequate appropriation the Department of Agriculture is not even able to place inspectors in all establishments desiring them. The present law prohibits the shipment of uninspected meat to foreign countries, but there is no provision forbidding the shipment of uninspected meats in interstate commerce, and thus the avenues of interstate commerce are left open to traffic in diseased or spoiled meats. If, as has been alleged on seemingly good authority, further evils exist, such as the improper use of chemicals and dyes, the Government lacks power to remedy them. A law is needed which will enable the inspectors of the General Government to inspect and supervise from the hoof to the can the preparation of the meat food product. The evil seems to be much less in the sale of dressed carcasses than in the sale of canned and other prepared products; and very much less as regards products sent abroad than as regards those used at home.

In my judgment the expense of the inspection should be paid by a fee levied on each animal slaughtered. If this is not done, the whole purpose of the law can at any time be defeated through an insufficient appropriation; and whenever there was no particular public interest in the subject it would be not only easy but natural thus to make the appropriation insufficient. If it were not for this consideration, I should favor the Government paying for the inspection.

The alarm expressed in certain quarters concerning this feature should be allayed by a realization of the fact that in no case, under such a law, will the cost of inspection exceed 8 cents per head.

I call special attention to the fact that this report is preliminary, and that the investigation is still unfinished. It is not yet possible to report on the alleged abuses in the use of deleterious chemical compounds in connection with canning and preserving meat products, nor on the alleged doctoring in this fashion of tainted meat and of products returned to the packers as having grown unsalable or unusable from age or from other reasons. Grave allegations are made in reference to abuses of this nature.

Let me repeat that under the present law there is practically no method of stopping these abuses if they should be discovered to exist. Legislation is needed in order to prevent the possibility of all abuses in the future. If no legislation is passed, then the excellent results accomplished by the work of this special committee will endure only so long as the memory of the committee's work is fresh, and a recrudescence of the abuses is absolutely certain.

I urge the immediate enactment into law of provisions which will enable the Department of Agriculture adequately to inspect the meat and meat food products entering into interstate commerce and to supervise the methods of preparing the same, and to prescribe the sanitary conditions under which the work shall be performed. I therefore commend to your favorable consideration and urge the enactment of substantially the provisions known as Senate amendment No. 29 to the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, as passed by the Senate, this amendment being commonly known as the "Beveridge amendment."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 4, 1906.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18030) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. PETTUS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19432) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NELSON. I move that Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELIZA SWORDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1160) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Swords, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HARIET T. SANDERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9813) granting a pension to Hariet T. Sanders, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the conference report on the rate bill may be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the rate bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a moment? I have a very short bill that I should like to call up, and I ask the indulgence of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very much disposed always to be courteous to the Senator from Florida, or any other Senator, but it is very late. If I had assurances that some other Senator would not want me to yield to him, I would yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. This bill will not take two minutes, unless there is objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield to the Senator, with the understanding that I can not yield to anybody else.

FLORIDA SEMINOLE INDIAN WAR.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5924) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men, and the officers and men of the boat companies, of the Florida Seminole Indian war.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SPOONER obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate for any very great length of time, but I do want time enough to say a few words before the vote is taken.

In the first place, in common with every other Senator here, I object to the practice to which the conferees have resorted in this instance of putting new matter in the bill, thereby becoming legislators instead of intermediaries to adjust differences and bring the two Houses together. I need not dwell upon that, however, because the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] in his remarks this morning admitted that it was a bad practice. He said that he did not himself approve of it, but that the conferees had resorted to it because of the exceptional circumstances attending the consideration of this measure.

I will not say anything in addition to what he said on that subject. But what I want to call attention to, in the first place, is the change they have made as to the clause in regard to free passes. The Senate gave that subject very careful consideration. It did not recklessly make exceptions to the prohibition against granting free passes, but named a number of classes that it desired to have exempted from the operation of that prohibition because of the merit of their claims so to be exempted.

I desire to speak first in behalf of the railroad employees. After careful consideration the Senate determined that the employees for themselves and their families should have the privilege of securing passes from the railroads on which they are employed and other railroads that might be willing to give exchange passes. That has been part of the pay for their services rendered ever since we have been operating railroads in this country. It is a privilege which they merit. There is no class of men better entitled to such consideration than the men who take their lives in their hands and render this important service for all who have occasion to make use of our common carriers.

I would argue this at some length if I thought there was any necessity for it. I do not think there is any necessity, because almost every Senator, if not every Senator here, has received to-day, as I have, numerous telegrams protesting against this discrimination against them, or rather this denial to them of the rights and privileges which they have always enjoyed in this respect.

I do not know, Mr. President, why we should be solicitous to deny to so deserving a class the consideration that we showed for them when the Senate adopted the provision it sent to conference. It is something that does not cost the public anything. They are identified with the roads. It has always been the practice of the roads to allow this consideration. I think it should be continued. I hope, therefore, when our conferees go into conference again they will remember that not only did the Senate vote that they should have that consideration shown them, but that the Senate is still of the opinion that that consideration should be extended to them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that it stands to reason that the Senate amendment must have been amended at the suggestion, and not otherwise, of the House conferees, or else we could not have amended it at all. I for one objected to this language which is in the bill, and accepted it only because I had to.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. And I will argue and plead with my brethren at the other end of the Capitol when we get together again to give us such consideration in connection with railroad employees at least as will continue to them, as I have always been in favor of doing, the privilege that they now enjoy of being transported free and of having their families transported free. But I can not tell what the House will do. It has some hard-headed men, too, and I do not know what we will do in conference. We will try to do the best we can, as we did in this instance.

Mr. FORAKER. I only wanted to express my own view about it, and I hope other Senators will do the same thing, so that the representatives of the Senate in the conference will at least know what is the wish of this body in that respect.

Now, there is another class of deserving men that we undertook to take care of, a much smaller class in point of numbers. They are the secretaries of the Young Men's Railroad Christian Association. They are people who are doing a great, good work, and it is essential that they should have opportunity to travel about over the roads without being subjected to the payment of compensation in the way of fares. They are doing service that makes men better, that makes the common carriers better and more careful of passengers who travel over them, safer and more acceptable than they otherwise would be.

I think they should be included; and, Mr. President, to make a long story short, I do not know of a class that the Senate named in its list of exceptions that should not be excepted from this prohibition. I hope the Senators will insist that the exceptions named by the Senate to the prohibition against passes shall be allowed.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was simply going to suggest to the Senator that it might do—I do not know whether it can be done; it certainly would meet my own views—if we could say who shall not have passes, limiting it to officers of the United States, Members of the House and Senators, officers of State governments and State legislatures, and then leave the railroads to haul whom they please free. That would do away with the crying evil, the seductive, indirect bribery which is the cause of all this free-pass agitation. But I do not know; the House might not be willing to accept that.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the office of a conferee is one that is not by any means certain as to its results, but it is proper that conferees should know what it is that those they represent desire to have incorporated.

Now, I pass that whole matter by, not because I have said all I should like to say, but because it is well understood, and I only wanted in a word or two to suggest what my desire is in regard to it.

Mr. President, I find that the conferees have also dropped out of the bill the amendment adopted by the Senate which required that common carriers should give equally good service and accommodations to all who pay the same compensation. I want to speak about that for a moment.

I offered the first amendment on that subject, and when the Senate voted on it, because it was coupled with another provision, or for some other reason, it failed of adoption. Later the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] offered practically the same amendment, though couched in somewhat different language. When he offered it I offered an amendment to his amendment, which he accepted, and in the form in which it appeared when he accepted it it was adopted by the Senate.

After it had been adopted I commenced to receive, as other Senators did, protests from Afro-Americans, some from Boston, some from Baltimore, some from other points, against the adoption of that amendment, upon the theory that it was a recognition of what they called the "jim-crow-car" system which has been inaugurated and is now being enforced in some of the Southern States.

When I offered that amendment I had in view only the purpose of securing for those who were compelled to take separate coaches, wherever they may be so compelled, equally good accommodations. I had no purpose, and so explained, of interfering with the established conditions anywhere, for I knew that was impossible in connection with this rate bill. I had no purpose to approve or disapprove of the so-called "jim-crow system." But I did have in view doing that which every legislature throughout the South, where they provide separate coaches, has announced they have done, namely, that those who are required to ride in separate coaches shall be given equally good coaches and equally good accommodations.

It never occurred to me that anybody in any Northern State would take exception to a provision of that kind upon the theory that it was in the nature of a sanction of the provision of separate coaches for white and colored men. But when they took that view of the subject, I was at a loss to know, just as other Senators were, exactly what should be done about it, but I recognized the right of colored people to settle the matter, and therefore I referred the whole matter to the conference committee and they have acted in the way indicated; they have dropped it out.

Now, before it is passed by forever I want to put into the RECORD some of the correspondence I had occasion to have on account of the offering of that amendment. I produce this because it shows what my purpose was, and it also shows the nature of the objections of those to whom I have referred.

It will appear, Mr. President, that I offered that amendment in response to scores and hundreds of letters I was receiving from colored men living in different parts of the South, which stated that the separate coaches set apart for them were so inferior in quality and in accommodations that they had nothing like equal treatment. They stated that they were required to pay the same fare, but were required to put up with unequal accommodations, so unequal that they thought they were suffering a grievous wrong. My idea was that by an amendment of that kind put into the bill the Interstate Commerce Commission would be given especial authority with respect to that matter on which it could stand to enforce equality of treatment, and that if equality of treatment should be denied redress could be sought, not alone in the courts of the State, but also in the courts of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not, of course, pretend to speak as to the other Southern States, but I do know that the State of Texas practices no such discrimination as that; and I do know that in almost every case one coach has a partition run through it and negro passengers occupy one part of the coach and the white passengers occupy the other part of it. It is not true of our State that the carriers provide inferior accommodations for negro passengers.

Mr. FORAKER. I am glad to have that statement from the Senator from Texas, for I know he would not make it unless he believed it to be true. I am not vouching for any of the statements that were written to me. I am only stating the reason upon which I acted.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that he will recall that I was ready to agree to that provision in his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe that the races ought to be separated, but I also believe that the negro race ought to be provided with accommodations for which they are required to pay.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that while I objected to his amendment in the original form, when he offered the amendment which was ingrafted upon the bill by the Senate—the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri—I stated the fact that, so far as I was prepared then to judge, that phraseology was satisfactory, recognizing, as I did, that while the local communities ought to be left free to judge for themselves as to the separation of races, where parties paid the same rate of fare they were entitled to equally as good accommodations.

I wish to add in this connection, Mr. President, it is true in Georgia that the cars furnished for the negroes are exactly of the same type of cars which are furnished for the whites. There are some rare exceptions possibly on some few little local trains, but as to the general practice they are exactly of the same type, one immediately adjoining the other.

I wish to add, further, that in the State of Georgia there is absolutely no dissatisfaction by the negro race on account of the accommodations which are furnished to them by the railroads. They are perfectly content with them. They have every reason to be content with them; and any suggestion to the contrary emanates solely from those who desire to make mischief.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I know nothing about what the facts are. I know I received a great many letters from the South indicating the contrary, and quite a number of them came from the State of Georgia. There may have been no truth in them. I am not discussing whether they were true or not. I am only discussing what I did when I was advised that unequal accommodations were furnished.

Among other letters which I received was one from a very intelligent colored man who is attending a law school in Boston. His home, however, I am advised, is in New Orleans. He is Mr. Charles P. Ford. In answer to him, I wrote a letter, which I ask to have read at the desk, and then, as a sample of the letters that I was receiving and have been receiving from many places in the South, I want to have read also, in so far as it has relation to that, a letter from Rev. H. H. Key, of Nashville, Tenn. Let the Secretary first read my letter to Mr. Ford and then read the letter of Mr. Key.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator consent just to have them printed? We can read them in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; they may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1906.

CHARLES P. FORD, Esq.,
Boston University Law School, Boston, Mass.:

DEAR SIR: I write to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 13, and to assure you of my proper appreciation for all its kind expressions. I infer from the way you write that you are familiar with all that the RECORD discloses as to the amendment offered by me May 7, which was, on the vote taken that day, defeated, but which was two or three days later offered by Senator WARNER, of Missouri, and, with an amendment I proposed, then adopted substantially in the form in which it was originally presented.

The subject is too important and difficult to be discussed in the compass of a letter, especially when I am compelled, as I am now, to write most hurriedly.

I was undertaking to deal with a condition rather than a theory. The condition presents the fact that in almost every Southern State the legislatures have, by law, not only authorized, but required, separate coaches, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held that these statutes, so far as intrastate passengers are concerned, are constitutional. As to interstate passengers there never has been any legislation and, of course, no judicial determination as to the limitations of the powers of Congress or as to the rights of the States to interfere with any regulations the Congress may prescribe.

It occurred to me that inasmuch as the Government was now for the first time assuming to regulate the rates that are to be paid for the transportation of freight and passengers we should explicitly provide that there should be equality of treatment for equality of pay, in order that the Commission might have an affirmative provision of law on which to base an enforcement of equal service and accommodations.

I offered this amendment because I had some letters from colored men throughout the South, as well as from a few colored men in the North, informing me that in the States where separate coaches were provided the coaches provided for the negroes are always inferior, and in most cases grossly inferior in quality, in some cases being of such inferior quality and kept in such bad condition as to be almost unfit for the transportation of passengers. I do not know what the facts are, but assuming these complaints are well founded, I thought there was a duty resting upon Congress to provide against such mistreatment, at least to the extent of requiring equally good service and accommodations, which is all any colored man writing me from the South has ever demanded, for they all seem to regard the provisions made by the State legislatures for separate coaches as not only likely to be continued indefinitely, but as something they have made up their minds to accept.

However all this may be, it is common knowledge that the conditions in this respect obtaining in the Southern States could not be disturbed short of a resort to radical legislation, which would be impossible in connection with the rate bill, and which, if perchance it might in some way be adopted as a part of the rate bill, would probably defeat it. From considerations of this character I sought to avoid raising the "Jim Crow" car question beyond putting into the bill a requirement that where such practice obtains the so-called "Jim Crow" car shall be as good and its accommodations as good as others receive. The purpose of this was not alone to secure equality of treatment in and of itself, but to give the United States authority through the Commission to enforce equality of treatment and to give the courts of the United States jurisdiction to entertain complaints of discriminations in that respect. I think the amendment all that could be expected under the circumstances. The vote by which my amendment as originally offered was defeated shows that conclusively. We must either, therefore, accept the Warner amendment, which has been adopted, or do nothing. I am unable to see how the amendment can work the slightest injury. It seems to me that on the contrary it secures great good. I am sure I do not wish to make matters worse.

A day or two ago I had a letter from Mr. Clement G. Morgan, an attorney at law, 39 Court street, Boston, whom you probably know. I never met him, but from what I have been told of him I have great respect for his judgment. I would be glad if you would confer with him and write me again, for the subject is one you and he are more directly interested in than I am and which you understand better than I do. The bill is likely to be voted upon before you have time to write me, but it will doubtless be some time in the conference committee, so that if you write me again I can have the benefit of your views before it is too late.

Very truly, yours, etc., J. B. FORAKER.

P. S.—In considering this matter you will bear in mind that the law of Congress will, of course, be supreme, and that no State law or authority can conflict with it as to interstate passengers. F.

Letter of Mr. Key.

53 MAPLE STREET,
Nashville, Tenn., May 15, 1906.

Hon. Mr. FORAKER,
United States Senator from Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Please accept our congratulations upon your position in discussing the rate bill and antifree-pass bill. Especially do we indorse your stand taken in regard to that part of the bill relative to equal accommodations.

We are sorry you did not get the support of other so-called "Republicans." They seem to want to drive us from the party of our choice by their actions. We are sorry that the ideas of Senators TILLMAN and BACON seem to be the leading ideas of the majority. Senator TILLMAN impressed the majority that the accommodations here in the South are equally good for both races. The Senator has either not made himself familiar with the existing facts here in this Southland or he means to be misleading in his statements. The accommodations are not equal. The colored people are forced to pay the same fare and ride in a car infested with chickens, dogs, and convicts. Our women are often compelled to submit to the abuses incident to treatment brought about by discriminations. They are forced to ride with drunkards and hoodlums. We readily accept Senator TILLMAN'S proposition to invite the Commission down here for a tour of inspection to verify the truth of our assertion. I myself had to resent an insult resulting from discrimination. On one occasion I rode a hundred miles in a baggage car rather than accept the humiliation of being with a mixed gang of white and colored convicts guarded by armed white officers. I would not be forced by the conductor to ride in such company. * * *

H. H. KEY,
Presiding Elder of the Cumberland River District of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Penn Annual Conference.

P. S.—I trust you may see a way to secure protection in all lines of travel, including Pullman.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, of the same general character is the following letter from Madison, Ark., dated May 30, 1906, signed by a number of Afro-Americans, as they represent themselves to me, and I have no doubt they are.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MADISON, ARK., May 30, 1906.

Hon. Senator FORAKER: We, the undersigned in name and number, petition you to, if possible, retain the amendment now before the railroad rate bill conference relative to equal accommodation to passengers on all railroads paying the same fare, which was introduced by you. We note that the negroes from the North and East are presenting their voices against it. While we are in the majority in the South, we are in favor of separate coaches with equal accommodation to all passengers paying the same fare.

SCOTT BOND, Merchant.
I. L. WALTON.
H. S. DAVIS, Postmaster.
P. COVINGTON, Farmer.
P. H. BANKS, Farmer.
W. M. BOND, Farmer.

Omitting names, the above is the voice of 2,000 citizens of business reputation. For God's sake try to get us the accommodations for which we pay.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to suggest a fact. The law in Georgia (and I presume it is so in other Southern States) does not permit a white man to ride in the car set apart for the negroes, no more than it permits a negro to ride in a car with the whites. The only distinction is that the white man is perfectly content to be debarred from the car in which the colored people ride, whereas a great many negroes are not content unless they are permitted to ride in the cars set apart for the white.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator, if he has any apprehension on that point, I have not received any letters from white people living in Georgia protesting against being compelled to ride in "Jim Crow" cars.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator knew the people of Georgia as well as I do, that assurance would not be needed.

Mr. FORAKER. I am sure of that. So far as the colored man is concerned, I am not going to take up now the subject of his rights for discussion. I only want to say that when I offered this amendment I did it in answer to just such appeals as I have sent to the desk, which will appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning for the benefit of any who may see fit to read; appeals which came to us, and have come from intelligent men and reputable men, against whom nothing can be said except only that they are black men; and that I am not going to urge as an objection against any man. They say that the cars furnished them, for which they must pay precisely the same fare as white men pay for the service rendered to them and the accommodations they get, are so unequal that it is almost an impossibility to ride in them with any comfort whatever.

Now, what I thought was, if they were receiving equally good accommodations, this amendment would not hurt anybody. If they are not equally good, the amendment ought to be put into the law, and ought to be enforced, for the black man who pays $10 to ride from one point to another ought to have just as good service and just as good accommodation as the white man has who pays the same price. The Senator from South Carolina was one of the first to say he heartily approved the amendment, and I really think he is the author of all the trouble, for as soon as the Senator from South Carolina made that announcement I commenced getting letters of objection from every direction. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, Mr. President, if my honest adoption and earnest advocacy of the Senator's proposed amendment has resulted in causing northern politicians who are colored people to deluge the Senator and others with protests, I am very sorry, because I heartily sympathize with that proposed legislation. I said so when it was first introduced, and I am in favor of it yet. I yielded that amendment the very last one in the conference committee, and I should like to see it go back. I hope the Senate will instruct us before we get through to put it back.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me, I want to tell a little incident in regard to the discrimination against the colored people and white people in keeping them apart in South Carolina. No doubt some of these complaints come from South Carolina.

Four or five years ago, when the law was first enacted—I think it was the succeeding winter—I went to Columbia to our State fair. I mean the law separating the races by compelling the railroads to give separate coaches. I went to the fair, and realizing that there was a great crowd there and that the train at night, the excursion train, would be very much crowded, I decided that I would go home on the noon train, about 1 o'clock. So I got my grip and went to the depot, and, although it was an hour or more before the train was to go out, I already found every seat occupied in the white cars and a throng in the passageway. There were several of those cars. So, not liking to stand up for the distance of 60 miles, I began to perambulate along from one car to another. Finally I got to a perfectly empty coach with no one in it except two darkies. Well, I quietly and very modestly ensconced myself in one of the seats. It was just as good as any of the cars I had passed through, but it was marked "colored," and under the law was set apart for colored people.

I had no right there, but I thought, "If I behave myself my colored fellow-citizens will not object." After a while, toward the time the train would leave, several colored gentlemen came in, among them a very bright, copper-colored fellow-citizen of mine, who evidently had been to college, because a little later on, after sitting down opposite me and smilingly entering into conversation, he said: "I know you, sir. I went to Benedict College while you were governor, and I know you." I said, "Well, I hope you never heard anything very bad about me." He said: "No; we colored people like you. Some of us, though, make a terrible racket about some things you have said. Your bark is worse than your bite."

Finally he said, with a gleam of humor, which simply convulsed me afterwards, although I did not relish it right off, "Governor, don't you think that the white folks ought to obey the laws they put on the books?" I did not need any more hint, I quietly reached down, got my grip, and said, "You are all right. I surely believe in obeying that law, because we would not let you ride either in the cars for the whites; and if you object to my riding here I will go back;" and I walked back and stood up.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not, in view of the lateness of the hour, care to prolong the discussion of that subject. I only want to quit it, as I began, by saying that I offered the amendment upon the theory that I was securing a benefit to 8,000,000 of colored people living in the Southern States from whom I was receiving many letters of the character I have described and of the character that will appear in the RECORD in the morning. But since colored men who understand the subject object to it upon the ground that has been suggested, I propose to leave it to the conferees to dispose of it as they may see fit.

Now, I have two or three other matters I wish to call attention to.

On pages 16 and 19 the words "knowingly and willfully" are stricken out by the conferees. I am not going to stop to discuss the effect of this; I only want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in my opinion it establishes a harsh, an inexcusably harsh, rule to make a man liable to indictment and punishment as for a criminal offense without showing any knowledge or any purpose on his part. I believe that the feeling I have expressed in a word in regard to that is entertained generally by the members of this body, for I have no idea that the feeling has changed since we voted those words into that amendment.

Now, what I want to add—and with that I am content—is what I have cut out of the New York Sun of June 1. It is an account, given in the form of a dispatch from Milwaukee, dated May 31, of a decision of the four circuit judges of that circuit in the rebate cases, in which the Pabst Brewing Company was a party, that were commenced, I think, after this session of Congress began. I want to call attention to what is here set forth in this telegram to show what, in the progress of this debate, I had occasion to assert over and over again, that what we need in the way of legislation to remedy all the evils that have been complained of is not the character of legislation we now have under consideration, but a mere strengthening of the Elkins law.

Now, what does this disclose? I want to read it. I will not put it into the RECORD, where it may be passed over without reading by anybody.

It is as follows:

[From New York Sun, June 1, 1906.]

FORCE ADDED TO ELKINS LAW—APPLIES TO FREIGHT BROKERS AND PRIVATE CAR LINES—GOVERNMENT WINS ITS SUIT AGAINST REFRIGERATOR TRANSIT COMPANY AND RAILROADS THAT THROUGH IT HANDLED PRODUCTS OF THE PABST BREWING COMPANY, OF MILWAUKEE.

MILWAUKEE, May 31, 1906.

The rebate suit which the Government last year began against the Pabst Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, the Refrigerator Transit Company, and several railroad companies has been decided in favor of the Government.

The decision was rendered by the four circuit judges of the seventh judicial circuit, who sat en banc, at the circuit court of the eastern Wisconsin district, and was sent up from Chicago this afternoon and filed with Clerk of Courts Kertz here.

The action against the Pabst Brewing Company is dismissed, but the Refrigerator Car Company and the railroads are enjoined from continuing the practice of receiving and giving commissions for traffic controlled and transported by the car company.

The opinion was written by Judge Baker, and was approved by Judges Grosscup, Seaman, and Kohlsaat, the other members of the court.

It is considered by lawyers to be a sweeping decision and one which upholds the provisions of the Elkins Act in all its intents and purposes.

It is not probable that the case will go to the United States Supreme Court, and therefore the ruling will have a radical effect on the shipping of the country.

Briefly stated, the court sustained practically all the contentions of the Government in the case. The court holds that the Elkins law is sound and enforceable.

I want Senators to remember that this litigation was commenced after we had commenced, as I now recall it, this session of Congress; it was commenced after the Hepburn bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, and it is ended before we have been able to end the consideration of that measure. So much for the expedition of the courts when they proceed under the Elkins law.

The ruling puts an end—

Now listen to what it puts an end to—

The ruling puts an end to all devices for giving and collecting rebates. The relation of the shipper and the railroads is defined in very clear language.

It holds that where a person or a company gives control of his or its shipments to another, such as a refrigerator company or a freight broker, the person or company to whom it is assigned must be deemed to be the owner and shipper of the freight and can not accept commissions or rebates from railroads. This is considered a highly important ruling, as it puts an end to the very latest devices found and practised for getting around the Elkins Act.

But the decision goes still further and holds that railroads must strictly observe their published tariffs and can not grant concessions to transportation companies or brokers whereby they receive less rate than that named in the published tariff. This means that hereafter transportation companies will not be able to collect commissions for business diverted to certain railroads, but must conduct their business on a strictly mileage basis.

It is estimated that a score or more refrigerator and stock car companies in the country are affected.

The ruling also puts out of business the so-called "freight broker," the latest device for rebating. The brokers collect freight and for commissions turn it over to certain railroads.

The railroad companies that were defendants in the action are the Pere Marquette, the Erie, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, the St. Louis and San Francisco, the Wisconsin Central, and the Chicago and Alton.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from Ohio happen to have the full text of that decision?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not. I have been unable thus far to get it; but I hope to get it and put it into the RECORD in full before this debate is concluded. I will put it into the RECORD at the earliest possible day.

Now, I want to call the attention of Senators to another fact. No doubt every Senator here has been reading the result of the investigation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the practices of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; no doubt every Senator here is familiar with the malpractices, I will say, for the want of a better word, which that company has been engaging in; but has any Senator here failed to note the fact that not a single offense committed by the Pennsylvania Railroad has been committed by it, according to that disclosure, that is not covered by the Elkins law; not one that can not be remedied almost immediately, just as the evils involved in this Milwaukee suit were remedied by the filing of a bill and the taking of a temporary restraining order upon the filing of the bill, which, upon final hearing, will be made perpetual, just as in the case of the Chesapeake and Ohio and the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad coal case? There suit was brought, an injunction was allowed, and the evil stopped that very moment. When the case was finally heard that injunction was made perpetual. So it was in the Milwaukee case, commenced only a few months ago, since we commenced this session, and now finally ended. In this case a suit was brought, and in it was involved the question of the illegality of the latest devices and abuses—for granting rebates, for making personal discriminations, terminal charges, icing charges, refrigerator charges, private car lines, and everything that we have heard anything about during the whole progress of this debate was involved in that one case that had not already been covered in these other cases to which I have referred.

Mr. President, if it be true, as it unquestionably must be conceded to be true, that there is a complete remedy under that law—for the court has so held, and that is the reason I say it must be so conceded—that upon the complaint that there is an unequal, an unjust, or a discriminatory allotment of cars, if it be true that as to that complaint this law can be applied and found sufficient to prevent it, and if it be true that under that law no form or guise whatever of rebates or discriminations can be practiced, there is no more necessity for this kind of legislation than there is for putting five wheels on a wagon.

Mr. President, one word more. I do not make these remarks, of course, with the idea of preventing the passage of this bill. That is an impossibility; but I make these remarks only that I may put before the Senate the state of the law which we have and the degree of success we are now having in all cases where an enforcement of that law is undertaken by the Department of Justice. In no case where that law has been invoked, from the day when it was passed down until this moment, has it failed to meet the purposes of the prosecution, except only in one case at Philadelphia, where there was a failure of testimony to support the complaint.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word. I know how anxious the conferees on this bill are to have it go back to conference, and I promise to delay it but a moment.

When this bill was under consideration the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] moved to increase the salary of the secretary to the Interstate Commerce Commission from $3,500 to $6,000. I moved to lay the amendment on the table, and by an almost unanimous viva voce vote it was tabled. I was surprised, in looking at the report of the committee of conference, to find, Mr. President, that not only had the conferees increased that salary, but that a new office had been created by them—that of assistant secretary. It is very manifest that the conferees did exceed their authority in that matter.

But, Mr. President, I want to say a word personal in reference to this question. I think this is the first time in my fifteen years of service that I have ever obtruded a personal observation on the Senate, but circumstances warrant it in this instance.

When the railroad rate bill was under consideration—I am not quite sure whether it was before I made the motion to table the amendment or not—I was waited upon by an outside party, who made a very earnest appeal to me in behalf of the secretary of this Commission. I said to him that I thought the salary he was receiving was adequate, inasmuch as it was the same salary the Civil Service Commissioners, and a great many other high officers of the Government, were receiving, and I added to that a criticism upon the secretary of the Commission to the effect that I thought he would be better occupied in giving his entire attention to the duties of his office, rather than to be promoting certain legislation. I did not state what the legislation was, but suggested that it was legislation that I thought objectionable, and I will now say that it was legislation not in anywise connected with the railroad question. Thereupon a Senator called my attention the next day to a letter from the secretary of this Commission, in which he stated that I had charged him with being an anarchist, etc. I said to the Senator, "That is not true; I never made any such accusation as that."

But now, Mr. President, while I may in a sense be violating confidence, I will say that I have in my hand a telegram and a letter that that gentleman sent to a high official of a railroad asking him to intervene to set me right on this question. Mr. Moseley probably did not know that I owe allegiance to no railroad or railroad official in the world; that I am under no obligations to any official of any railroad in the United States; and hence he made a mistake in assuming, as he evidently did, that I could be straightened out in this matter and that I would agree to an increase of his salary in one way or another. It is proper that I should say that the official to whom he wrote did not undertake to carry out his wishes. In his letter and telegram he repeated the foolish statement that I had charged him with being an anarchist and an enemy to sound legislation. Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned that is of no particular consequence, but I thought I would take this occasion to say to that gentleman that he ought to have come to me in person and discussed the matter in a manly way rather than to have paraded it over the country as he has done.

If the Congress of the United States thinks the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have a five or six thousand dollar salary—the first proposition was to give him a thousand dollars more than Senators and Members of the House of Representatives are receiving and the present proposition is to give him a salary equal in amount to that of a Senator—I say, if the Congress of the United States thinks that that officer ought to have an increase of salary and that the Commission ought to have an assistant secretary at $4,000 a year, that can be regulated by a joint resolution after this matter has been properly disposed of by the conference committee. But however that may be, when the bill goes back to conference I shall expect that the provision relating to the secretary of this Commission and the creation of a new official in the person of an assistant secretary may not reappear when the report is again presented to the two Houses of Congress. If it does, I shall have something further to say on the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from South Carolina expect to get a vote on the conference report to-night?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, I can not undertake to do more than to express the hope that I will. It is now twenty minutes after 5. The day has been long, it is hot, and, of course, we are all tired. I can not see what good it is going to do for Senators to talk, because the matters which I mentioned this morning, which are subject to the point of order, and in inserting which the conferees have exceeded their authority, and knew it when they did it, and authorized me to come in here and say so, will all go out; but the things that we thought we had a right to put in, I presume will have to be put out by a vote of the Senate. Therefore, all this lecturing and advice might as well be saved until the vote comes. I am speaking for myself alone, of course, because the other Senate conferees will outvote me and the House conferees will control. We have got to compromise these matters, and I can only do the best that is in my power. That is all. I should like to get a vote this evening, however.

Mr. SPOONER. I asked the question of the Senator because I happen to know of several Senators who desire, I think each one very briefly, to address the Senate upon some phase of this report. I think it is utterly impossible that it can be concluded to-day.

Mr. TILLMAN. Senators will not talk so long this evening when they are tired as they will to-morrow morning when they are fresh.

Mr. SPOONER. I think a number of Senators would like to send the Senator from South Carolina and his associates back to conference on the motion that the Senate entirely disapproves——

Mr. TILLMAN. But how can the Senate disapprove, if half a dozen Senators make speeches like those we have heard?

Mr. LODGE. We can take the vote later.

Mr. TILLMAN. We will take the vote later, if the Senate so desires.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator and his associates will, perhaps, bring back a disagreement as to one item, at least, in this bill rather than——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing, and will be anxious, and was anxious to do it, in order to bring back a disagreement on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], which is known as the "Jim Crow" car amendment. I am very anxious to bring in a disagreement on that.

Mr. SPOONER. The "Jim Crow" car amendment, I think, ought not to have been omitted from the bill; but I think the conference report, as to passes to employees of railroad companies, is very much worse.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no doubt in my own mind that after the expressions of disapproval in the shape of the avalanche of telegrams that have come to Members of the House and of the Senate, we certainly will be able to agree on a modification of that to the extent of not prohibiting railroads from carrying their own employees and their families. I never was in favor of such a prohibition, but I got all I could.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me a moment——

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. To express the hope that the Senator from South Carolina will allow us to adjourn now. I do not think by keeping us here a half an hour longer he will gain anything. There are a number of Senators who intend to speak, and if we should proceed to-night there would only be a repetition in the morning——

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is the desire of the Senate to adjourn, it can always do so without my will. I can not keep the Senate here if Senators want to leave. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall adjourn, and I shall not protest.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina who, I think, has a right to make whatever motion is made, as he is in charge of this measure, that he move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. I always try to accommodate the Senator. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 6, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by Rev. CHARLES C. PIERCE, D. D., chaplain, Artillery Corps, United States Army.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. I move the approval of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

CERTAIN FOREIGN CLAIMS.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19606) to pay certain claims of citizens of foreign countries against the United States, and to satisfy certain conventional obligations of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following amounts be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the following claims against the United States, hereinafter stated, the same being in full for and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as full and final release of the respective claims, namely:

First. To pay the Canadian Electric Light Company, for damages to its cable by the U. S. gunboat Essex, by fouling her anchor with the campany's cable, between Levis and the city of Quebec, July 17, 1904, the sum of $7,307.30.

Second. To pay the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company of Canada, for damages to their telegraph cable by the U. S. gunboat Essex, between the city of Quebec and Levis, by fouling her anchor with the company's cable, July 17, 1904, the sum of $939.58.

Third. To pay Messrs. Sive-Wright, Bacon & Co., of Manchester, England, for damages to their vessel, the British steamship Eastry, by collision, 1901, at Manila, with certain coal hulks of the United States, the sum of $4,313.50.

Fourth. To pay William Radcliffe, British subject, for damages caused by destruction of his fish hatchery and property in Delta, Colo., by a mob in 1901, the sum of $25,000.

Fifth. To pay to the Empire of Germany, in full settlement of the obligation of the United States Government to Germany under the convention between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain for the settlement of Samoan claims, signed at Washington, November 7, 1899, the sum of $20,000.

Sixth. To pay the British owners of the British steamship Lindisfarne, for demurrage to that vessel while undergoing repairs necessitated through collision with the U. S. army transport Crook in New York Harbor, May 23, 1900, the sum of $158.11.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I will demand a second for the purpose of finding out about the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering a second as ordered?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to pay certain claims of foreign citizens, which claims have been presented to our Department of State by the foreign ambassadors, and payment of which is recommended by the Secretary of State.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, this is suspension day, continued from yesterday. The rules of the House set apart certain special days—Fridays—for the consideration of claims. This appears to be a bill reported from the Committee on Claims, and I want to make a point of order. By what authority or right, under the rules of the House, is a bill called up for passage under suspension of the rules, which bill contains a claim or any number of claims, when bills of this character have by the rules of the House been assigned for consideration to a particular day, or certain named days, of each month?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman. This is a motion to suspend all rules and pass the bill. The gentleman is correct as to the rule. It has not been the practice of the present occupant of the chair to submit bills upon the Private Calendar for passage on suspension day, but this is a bill upon the Union Calendar, which is alleged to cover several claims between the United States and foreign peoples.

Mr. BARTLETT. An omnibus claims bill.

The SPEAKER. One claim in favor of the Empire of Germany, growing out of relations in Samoa. It seems to the Chair, without expressing any opinion as to the merits of the various propositions, after reading the report and the letter from the Secretary of State, that this is a bill properly on the Union Calendar, and not on the Private Calendar, of a class that the House ought to be able to consider under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, some of these claims were put on the urgent deficiency bill by the Senate, but stricken from that bill by the House conferees on the ground that they were claims, referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and afterwards referred to our committee. There is also included in this bill a claim of $20,000, which we have agreed to pay to the German Government. There was a subvention, or treaty, between the German Government, the English Government, and our Government with regard to certain claims of German citizens. The total amount of these claims, if I recollect, was about $115,000. It was finally agreed by the agents of the different Governments that all these clams should be settled for $40,000, which amount the German Government agreed to accept. Great Britain was to pay $20,000, and we were to pay $20,000. Great Britain has already paid her $20,000, and we certainly ought to pay ours.

The other claims are claims of citizens of foreign governments, which have been submitted by the foreign ambassadors to our State Department, passed upon, and approved, and originally sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and then referred to the Committee on Claims for examination and the introduction of a bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice in the reading of the bill that there was one claim for property destroyed by a mob in one of the Western States.

Mr. WALDO. In Colorado—that is correct.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it customary for this Government to pay damages to aliens for property destroyed in that manner?

Mr. WALDO. I understand it has been done a number of times.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have no authority to pay damages to our own citizens under circumstances of that kind, have we?

Mr. WALDO. We certainly can if we see fit.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman know of any instance in the history of this Government where such payment has been made to a citizen of the United States?

Mr. WALDO. I think there are cases of that kind.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The reason I asked the question was to emphasize the fact of our responsibility for the safety of persons and property of aliens who are here under the protection of treaties with foreign countries, and the importance of passing some kind of national legislation to protect those people. If we are to be responsible for them, we ought to have special laws that will afford them and their property protection.

Mr. WALDO. There can be no question but that we ought to pay the damages due to a foreign citizen, and unless some further explanation is required I will ask for the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. WALDO. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demanded a second because it occurred to me that this was an unusual proceeding and contrary to any previous action of the House upon bills of this character that I have ever seen undertaken to be had upon suspension day during the eleven years of my service in the House.

Now, I admit, Mr. Speaker, under the fifth heading of this bill, which proposes to pay to the Empire of Germany, in full settlement of the obligation of the United States Government, under a convention between that Government and the other governments involved, some time in 1899, for the claims growing out of the Samoan disaster, that if that claim stood alone, it would be entitled to be considered as a public bill and to go upon the Union Calendar and be now considered under a suspension of the rules. I will admit, further, Mr. Speaker, that if that provision stood alone, it would be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to provide, by necessary appropriation, to pay our obligation to the foreign government, because that obligation grows out of a convention or an agreement on the part of the United States to pay its proportion of the damages following that disaster; but I do insist and I do protest that it is not a proper practice in this House to link with the obligations that we owe to a foreign government other private and individual claims that we may owe to other people, be they foreigners or be they our own citizens. Therefore I do not believe this bill ought to pass in its present shape. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations ought to take the provision contained in this bill, on page 2, commencing in line 20, designated as the fifth provision of the bill, and provide for it either in a special urgent deficiency bill or in the general deficiency bill; but I do not believe it is good practice on the part of the House, nor do I believe it is safe and good legislation, to link with this the other propositions and to drag along with a meritorious proposition these others that we are not accustomed, under the rules, to consider except on private-claims days. I have no objection to the United States Government paying every dollar it owes to everyone, but I do not believe it to be correct that because some one who resides in Canada or who happens to be a foreigner has a claim against the United States Government that we should prefer them to all other claims of our own people in the matter of consideration by the House. Therefore I shall content myself with calling attention of the House to the character of the bill. It seems to be an omnibus bill for a certain character of claims. I do not believe we ought to pass it in this way. I believe that we ought to pass the provision in the bill to which I have called attention in the usual way, and let us be informed by a separate report upon each one how the United States Government comes to owe them. If we owe them, let us pay them.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALDO. This is a bill that comes from the State Department for the payment of foreign claims. Many of the claims have lain in the State Department for some time. They have been repeatedly passed by this House, and they ought to pass now.

I differ greatly with the gentleman from Georgia. I believe that we ought first to pay what we owe to the foreign governments and to the citizens of foreign governments, when presented by the representatives of those governments and approved by the State Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman believe that we ought to pay claims of our own citizens?

Mr. WALDO. Yes; but I think that we ought to pay the bills that we owe to foreign countries first, even if it bankrupts us.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill was passed.

LEASING OF THE BATAN ISLAND MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17293) to authorize the leasing of the Batan Island Military Reservation for coal-mining purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease the coal-mining rights in the Batan Island Military Reservation to any company or corporation, organized under the laws of the United States, or any State thereof, or of the Philippine government, which, in his opinion, shall be deemed responsible for carrying out the provisions of said lease.

SEC. 2. That the term "mining rights" in the first section hereof shall be deemed to include the use of all land included in and all natural products of the said Batan Island Military Reservation which may be necessary for and consistent with the establishment and operation of a coal mine and coaling station, and shall also include the right to take and use water from the Cacraray Military Reservation.

SEC. 3. That the said lease shall be granted after due advertisement and public bidding for same, and shall run for a period not exceeding fifty years. Said lease shall be signed on behalf of the Government of the United States by the Secretary of War thereof, and on behalf of the company or corporation undertaking the establishment and operation of said coal mine by the chief officer thereof thereunto duly authorized by the stockholders and directors of the same, and shall contain among others the following provisions:

First. That all branches of the Government of the United States and of the government of the Philippine Islands thereof shall be supplied with such coal as they may desire, laid on board ship at the harbor of Batan Island, known as Coal Harbor, at a price not to exceed 10 per cent above cost price of said coal.

Second. That the necessary wharves for receiving vessels of up to 32 feet draft and for loading coal thereon shall be erected and maintained by the company or corporation operating the said mine.

Third. That the items included in the calculations of the cost of said coal shall consist of all items of expense for labor necessary for producing the coal and for handling and loading the same on board ship, for the proper care and handling of machinery connected therewith, for the proper care and management of the interior workings of a coal mine and all machinery connected with the safe and economical operation thereof, and for the proper upkeep of all exterior buildings, grounds, and machinery incident to the operation of a coal mine and coal-loading station; all items of expense for labor and material connected with the repairs of all machinery, rolling stock, buildings, and apparatus necessary for the safe and economical upkeep of the mine and its appurtenances and of the coal-loading apparatus and docks, but shall not include the cost of new work for the extension of the plant; all items of expense for supplies for the safe and economical extraction of coal, and the maintenance of the offices, buildings, and machinery maintained, erected, or in use on the aforesaid reservation; all items of general expense, such as taxes, insurance, and the reasonable depreciation on plant and property, and such others as may be also directly and solely connected with the management of the plant and offices installed on the reservation for the purpose of mining and loading coal, which shall include salaries for persons resident at the plant and necessary for the management and conduct thereof as above set forth.

Fourth. That all books and records of every nature of the company or corporation operating the said mine shall be subject to examination and inspection by any official or employee of the United States Government designated by the Secretary of War, and that any evasion of this provision shall, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, operate to render null and void any lease granted under the provisions of this act.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the House will recollect that a few weeks ago we passed a bill which was subsequently enacted into law providing for the purchase of certain Spanish claims on the island of Batan in the Philippine Archipelago in order that the United States Government might acquire complete control of that island. These were old claims. They were so located as to bar access from the harbor to the coal strata in the island—that is, if the miner was to have anything like a fair opportunity to mine the coal.

We bought those claims, and now the United States Government has perfect, unclouded title to the island. It is about 10 by 5 miles in dimensions, and 450 miles by direct water route from Manila. The Government authorized Lieutenant Wigmore, of the Corps of Engineers, I think, four years ago to make an investigation with a view of determining how rich in coal the island is. He made a thorough investigation with diamond drills and by the actual mining of coal, which occupied the better part of two years. As a result he filed an official report in which it is said that there are two strata of coal, varying in width from 8 feet to over 20 feet, separated by a limestone stratum; the highest outcrop is 500 feet above the sea, and the diamond drills revealed coal to the depth of at least 300 feet below the level of the sea. He does not know how much farther down the coal extends.

The United States Government and the Philippine government together pay for coal now used on transports and for public purposes in Manila in the ice plant and elsewhere about a million dollars a year—about $5 a ton for coal as it comes from Japan and Australia.

The idea is by this bill to permit the United States Government, through the War Department, to advertise for bidders (and there are three or four prospective bidders, I understand), they to submit the terms upon which they will consent to mine that coal and furnish such amounts as the United States Government and the Philippine government, respectively, may need, at a price not to exceed 10 per cent above the cost price on board ship in the harbor at Batan.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In one minute. As I have said, coal now costs these two governments about $5 a ton. The Batan coal is a better quality than the Japanese coal, and can be laid upon the ship at $2 a ton in the harbor at Batan; adding 10 per cent would make $2.20 to the United States. By carrying out this arrangement, if one is perfected, it will save approximately $400,000 a year to the United States Government and to the treasury of the Philippine Islands—possibly half a million dollars. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did not we pay $50,000 for this land over there for the identical purpose of getting coal which we needed for the Philippine government?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We paid $50,000 for some Spanish claims, that were indefeasible, according to the law department. These claims were 10 years old and antedated our entering into the possession of the Philippines.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We paid $50,000 for something.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We had to pay them in order that somebody might get the coal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason the United States does not go there and mine the coal?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Government thinks, and I think it is the sense of Congress, that it would be better for the Government to turn this property over to lessees and let the two governments get coal at 10 per cent above the cost price, rather than for the Government of the United States or for the Philippine government to enter into the coal-mining business in the island of Batan.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They can sell this coal to anybody who wants it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does anybody know there is an inexhaustible supply of coal over there or not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They think it will last a hundred and fifty years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. According to the Speaker's statement here one day, we are going to hold these islands forever and a day. Now, if that is so, it seems to me we ought to put our own men to digging that coal and keep the coal over there for ourselves.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is just a question of public policy. The committee thought, and officials generally think, as do the officials of the Philippine government, that it would be better for the United States Government to lease this coal land rather than engage itself in mining the coal in that island. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the consideration the Government will receive for this lease of fifty years?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About $400,000 of money saved to these governments annually.

Mr. TAWNEY. In what way is that saving or that amount received by the Government?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The United States Government is compelled to-day to pay for coal which it uses in the Philippines, and on its transports touching there, and in its coast-guard boats and launches, and the Philippine government is also compelled to pay for coal used in its icing plants and other public works an average price of $5 a ton.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, does the gentleman include the coal used in the Navy in that?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is for the Philippine government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And for the United States transports, coast-guard boats, etc.

Mr. TAWNEY. In what respect is the Government of the United States benefited by saving to the Philippine government in the amount of coal consumed?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The transports which run back and forth can use this coal, and it is in testimony that we can save $2,500 a trip if they can mine that coal and get it at $2.20 or $2.25 a ton.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the actual consideration is that we are obliged to purchase this coal from the lessee at 10 per cent above the cost of producing it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, wait a moment; and the saving of about $400,000 a year of money which to-day must be paid to the miners of Japanese or Australian coal.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the actual consideration paid by the lessee is merely the difference between 10 per cent above the cost of producing the coal and the market value of the coal in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But suppose we agreed to pay $5 a ton and the lessee turned back $400,000, there would be no difference at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are entitled, are we not, to some consideration for the investment there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; there is a good deal of an investment.

Mr. TAWNEY. All the consideration which the lessee pays under your proposition is the difference between 10 per cent above the cost of producing the coal and the market price of the coal in the Philippine Islands, the coal which the United States Government consumes, and that is the only consideration. One further question——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does this come out of the gentleman's time or out of mine?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask it in my own time. You lease to these parties——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand that the gentleman from Minnesota has the floor?

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you lease to these parties——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have reserved the balance of my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am recognized in my own right, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Wisconsin a question if he will permit it. Do you propose to lease the Government reservation in addition to the Spanish claims?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We lease the coal lands in the island of Batan.

Mr. TAWNEY. You lease the entire island?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The coal mines are on the Batan reservation.

Mr. TAWNEY. That includes the Government reservation in addition to the claims which we have purchased from the Spaniards. What is the estimated value of the island of Batan, or the coal on the island of Batan?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know that any estimate has been made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has not Lieutenant Wigmore made an estimate?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not recall that he has. The gentleman can figure that out himself.

Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is that Lieutenant Wigmore had made an estimate of that, and it seems to me, I will say, a very strange transaction for us to lease to these parties the coal lands in the entire island, conceded to be the best coal-producing part of the Philippine Islands, giving a perpetual lease for a consideration which merely represents the difference between 10 per cent above the cost of producing the coal, which, of course, does not amount to anything like the real value for the amount of coal on that island.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman makes an assumption which might in part account for his argument. He says it is a perpetual lease, whereas the limit is fifty years.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a fifty-year lease. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question in his own time. The question is whether the difference in the price of the coal is the only consideration, or whether the bill contemplates bids, and that there will be an additional compensation for the coal?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill provides that they shall have as essential in their bids an undertaking that they shall furnish coal to these two governments at 10 per cent above cost.

Mr. PAYNE. With the understanding that they will pay a royalty for the balance?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is to be competition in bidding. I think bidders will submit a very much better proposition than that, because there are three or more, I believe, who are desirous to get in there. But the bill does not absolutely require bids to include a royalty.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I am somewhat familiar with the history of this island. I am perfectly certain from the discussion we have had that the proposition now is to destroy it, so far as its general usefulness to the United States is concerned, as a place to mine coal for the benefit of the United States. Now, that the bill will accomplish that thing is certain within the next fifty years, that it will let some private corporation, such as the Union Iron Works Company, of San Francisco, or some other company, get into a great and extensive coal speculation, under which the Philippine government and the United States Government is to pay 10 per cent in addition to that company in the way of profit after leasing the property to it for fifty years. Why should not the United States mine the coal as it needs it and save the 10 per cent and save the island and its coal for the country for use in future years? It seems to me it would be the best for the United States to go to work and get this coal out for itself as it is needed by it rather than to pass this particularly bad bill that authorizes a lease the effect of which would be to give the coal on the island of Batan away and to pay a premium to the lessee for taking it.

It is suggested that somebody might make a better offer. And the gentleman from Wisconsin has spoken about that being done at the time when we are authorizing a lease, or worse than that; but as the bill stands it provides for the giving away of this great natural coal deposit in the island of Batan. We wisely purchased some claims to secure a good title to the island.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me, I am informed by a member of the committee that it will cost $1,000,000 to install the plant. Would the gentleman have the United States enter into a proposition of that kind?

Mr. KEIFER. Where does that information come from? I have been a little familiar with mining myself, and it is always easy to talk about large sums. It would not cost to mine in a moderate way out there more than $100,000, if as much, unless there is something marvelous about the conditions there. In Missouri you can establish a very good coal-mine plant for $50,000. Then the Government under the proposed lease would be charged with this $1,000,000, if that sum should be used in making up the cost of the mine. The leasing company would, under the proposed lease, take the cost of their plant into account and add it to the cost of producing, and then add 10 per cent in addition on all coal the Government might need or buy. So we will still have to pay for establishing the lessee's plant as well as pay the 10 per cent; and we had better pay it in the first instance and mine the coal within the limits that we need and enough for every purpose—including our Navy and for transports—and let the balance of the coal remain in the earth for future uses and future generations. I do not understand under the proposition the lessees are to pay anything for the coal they mine and sell to parties other than the United States, and there is no regulation as to fixing the price that they are to charge other people. The effect of the bill, should it become a law, would be to give away our only valuable coal acquisition in the Philippines.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that I want five minutes. The gentleman from Ohio has covered part of what I have to say. We are proposing, Mr. Speaker, to give for fifty years to some corporation a property which, according to the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin, will be at least worth $100,000,000 in cash, if it is developed or shows the amount of coal that it is suggested, without any compensation to the Government in the way of royalty for all the fifty years. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we pay the 10 per cent they make up the item of cost, as the gentleman from Ohio has stated. Whatever the amount of cost they expend there in developing the property we have got to pay 10 per cent on for the coal we use ourselves, and we get absolutely nothing for the millions of tons that may be shipped to China or sold to the people of the islands or to any other people. They talk about competition. Gentlemen, any three companies desiring this property for fifty years will have wisdom enough to make a combination and divide the swag rather than fight each other for the exclusive use of the property for themselves. There ought to be in this great property a safeguard that will insure some benefit for the future, in place of tying it up in this way now for so long a period of time. If it is necessary for us to protect the Government, if the coal is situated as represented at the time that we authorized the payment of $50,000 to buy the land between the shore and the coal field, $25,000 will put up a plant ample to supply the Government of the United States and the Philippine government with every ton of coal they may need for their purposes, and I hope this Congress will not in this way surrender its right to this valuable property, and that no measure of this kind will pass the House. [Applause.] Let the bill be properly considered and safeguarded or let it die.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this proposition is a very unwise one—in fact, one of the unwisest ever introduced here. I need not take the time of the House to explain my position about the Philippine Islands; but if we are going to keep them, then surely we ought not to alienate or to lease out or in any way get rid of any of the means of defending ourselves in the Philippine Islands. That is the danger point of this Republic, if we ever get into any foreign war, and everybody knows it. Among the many regrettable features of the Philippine situation that is the most regrettable. The Speaker of the House once said that we were going to hold the Philippines forever and a day. Other people have modified that statement somewhat, but however that may be we have them on hand now; there is no question about that. More's the pity. Here not long ago we voted an appropriation of $50,000 to secure the shadowy rights of somebody to a passageway to these very identical lands, in order that we might have a certainty of having coal over there. Now, the committee comes in and proposes to lease the land for fifty years to anybody who bids the highest. That's the theory, but of course everybody knows who it is that is going to get the lease for fifty years. It is true that they put into this contract the clause that they must keep on hand coal enough for our uses and the uses of the Philippine government, but suppose they do not keep it on hand, and suppose that we suddenly get into a foreign war and find ourselves in the Philippine Islands without any coal? We would be in a most unfortunate and disastrous condition, wouldn't we? Inasmuch as we have these coal lands, and have paid for them, I am in favor of the United States Government fixing up a mine of its own over there, so that nobody can get a ton of coal out of that island except ourselves for our own purposes.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] says there is coal enough over there to last one hundred and fifty years. Suppose that is true; we are not legislating for one hundred and fifty years, but for all time, if the statement of the Speaker of this House be true. One hundred and fifty years is sufficient for the Union Iron Company, of San Francisco, or some other company to exploit the coal fields of those islands, but it is not sufficient to last us as long as we are going to keep the islands, if the Speaker was correct, and I really am sorry to say that I am afraid he was correct.

I am in favor of the United States Government having a place to make its own armor plate, a place to make its own guns, a place to make its own powder, a place to build its own battle ships, and inasmuch as in this case we need coal over there, I am in favor of the Government clinging to every pound of that coal, and I am dead against this proposition either as it stands or under any amendment that you can put into it. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know whether or not, in the gentleman's judgment, our Government, in case a lease is made with some corporation, will be bound to maintain that corporation in its quiet and peaceable possession of that coal land in case we get out of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We own that island, and I doubt whether the Congress of the United States would ever consent to give up that coaling station.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not in favor of any contract or the erection of any building or any betterments or any policy of any kind which will tie us up there and keep us there in the islands when the time comes, if it ever does come, for us to get out and set the Filipinos up as an independent republic. We should not make any contracts with any corporations or persons by which we shall be bound to assume obligations from which we can not be released if the time ever comes when, in the wisdom of the American people, they feel disposed to relinquish their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. We own the islands and the coal. The contract proposed does not appear to be a very advantageous one, and one of the unfortunate complications may be that this Government will be under obligations to maintain the coal company in quiet and peaceable possession of that island, even when our people may consider it to their advantage and their patriotic duty to surrender our occupancy. I do not believe at this time in assuming an obligation which may result in an expensive and troublesome entanglement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word in closing. I am not opposed to the leasing of these coal lands on the island of Batan. I am opposed to the proposed form of the lease which is authorized by this bill. If this bill could be considered in the House or Committee of the Whole, where it could be amended, I feel confident that it could be so amended as to be acceptable, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin may figure it as he pleases, the last analysis is that whoever gets this lease pays absolutely nothing to the Government of the United States for all the coal that is taken out of the mines on this island, and in addition to that the Government of the United States must pay to the lessee a commercial profit on every ton of coal it furnishes to the Government of the United States. You can not get away from that proposition—10 per cent above the cost, not above the cost of producing—but it is specially provided here that in figuring the cost of production you must figure the cost of the plant. You must also figure 10 per cent of the upkeep or the maintenance of that plant in addition to the cost of producing the coal. Now, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that under this contract the Government gets absolutely nothing and it pays a commercial profit to the lessee for every pound of coal that it consumes or takes from it. Because of these conditions I submit to the House that this bill ought not to be considered under suspension of the rules, where there is no opportunity to amend it. If it is brought up at all, it ought to be either in the House or in Committee of the Whole, where it can be considered and amended. I hope, therefore, that the motion of the gentleman will not prevail.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the bill at all as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] understands it. The Government has an island in the Philippines with coal on it. This bill gives authority to the War Department to lease that island on advertisement and competitive bids. They may get a royalty. Nobody knows how much. It absolutely leaves it discretionary with them. As I understand, the royalty on coal lands in Pennsylvania ranges from 6 to 10 cents a ton. Nobody knows what we will get for this coal. The assumption that the coal is to be taken out and sold for the benefit of the company is a pure assumption. Even the Department itself does not know what bids will be submitted. If they are not satisfactory they will not be accepted. The only condition that is put in here is that, having received a satisfactory bid—a satisfactory royalty upon the coal that is in the island—they shall reserve to themselves the right, for the Army and Navy uses of the Government, not to be charged more than 10 per cent above the cost of getting out the coal.

Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. HULL, and Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS].

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. We are new in the Philippine Islands, are we not?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. We know very little about the conditions there.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. We know very little about those islands.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Exactly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Does the gentleman from Connecticut think it is wise to tie up the coal lands of those islands for fifty years to any corporation?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would not think so if I did not know what the bid was, and that can not be determined until after the bids are opened.

Mr. TAWNEY. Right there will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If I owned a thousand acres of coal land in Pennsylvania I would lease it on a royalty, as I presume nine-tenths of the coal land or a large proportion of the coal lands there are leased and operated. Now, this bill is simply to give the United States Government the privilege of doing precisely what any individual would do if he owned this island and this coal. To say that the coal is to be given away is absurd. To say that we put ourselves entirely in the control of an unknown bidder is absurd, until we know what the bids are, and if they are not for the best interests of the United States Government they will not be accepted; but until you advertise, until you get your bids, what are you going to do? Are you going to let the coal lie there unused?

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question right on that point?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Why not write into the law a definite proposition?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If you will write into the law what you are willing to give for the coal, I am perfectly willing; but nobody knows what royalty will be offered for it. Nobody knows what kind of a bid will be made. That is to be determined after advertisement and competitive bidding. The Department reserves all rights to accept or reject or include such restrictions as they see fit to make.

Mr. HULL. You are giving up all your rights.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. You do not give up any right until you see the bids, and you do not sign any contract until the bids are in and accepted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, have I any time remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield a half a minute of that to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. The gentleman spoke of the practice that prevailed in Pennsylvania. I would like to ask him if it is not true that thousands and thousands of acres of coal lands in Pennsylvania were originally given away, and the gentleman proposes to give away these?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Not at all, not at all; the whole purpose of this bill is, if the gentleman takes the right view of it, that the Government of the United States shall get the full value of the coal taken out.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But it is a fact that thousands of acres of lands were originally given away which are now selling for from $500 to $5,000 per acre.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I can not do anything in thirty seconds except to say that I voted and urged the passage of the bill to close the option and pay $50,000 for the island, because I thought it was necessary to get our hands upon that valuable property. I am opposed in this hurried way at this time to alienate any of the rights of the Government under any contract. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, just one word: I recall very distinctly the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations when the War Department sought to obtain an appropriation of $50,000, under the head of "Transportation for the Army," for the purpose of purchasing this island. At that time Lieutenant Wigmore told us there was only one concern in the United States that could be induced to lease and operate these coal mines, and that was the Union Iron Works, at San Francisco, and that he was not certain that company would lease. I have no doubt, in the light of subsequent developments, that the plan was to get the Government of the United States to buy these Spanish claims and then lease the island to this concern at practically a nominal rent, and the Government of the United States would get nothing whatever from it, and I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, "scheme" is a very suggestive word, a very unfair word to use in this connection. Nobody knows that better than does the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will substitute the word "plan."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That sounds much better, but it would have sounded still better if the gentleman had used it before using the word "scheme." "Scheme," used in this connection, has a kind of sinister meaning.

Why, the Secretary of War has recommended this plan, as has the Philippine government from the beginning. Not only this, but the original bill introduced in the House months ago, with which the gentleman from Minnesota is absolutely familiar, because he alluded to it in a speech in the House some weeks since, did not provide for anything else. There has been no concealment of the desire to lease this coal land should there be opportunity, and it is unfair for the gentleman to make an insinuation not based upon the facts nor anything resembling the facts. The gentleman from Ohio says that we can put up a plant there for $50,000. The gentleman from Ohio has never been within 10,000 miles of Batan Island.

Here is Lieutenant Wigmore, an expert, familiar with all the facts, who says, "You say, I believe, that an up-to-date plant there would cost $500,000?" "Yes."

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield now.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to know where Lieutenant Wigmore ever built a plant. I can tell him where people have built a good one for $25,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would cost a great deal more to build this plant 450 miles from Manila on Batan Island, to which the only route is by water, where there is no city, no village, no habitation, no docks, no wharves, no piers, and where the lessee would have to build all of these things, than it would to construct a similar plant in Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEIFER. That is not the plant; that is something else.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the criticism made during this discussion, because this bill, which is here at the suggestion of the War Department and of the Philippine government, is silent as to the price at which other consumers besides the two governments may get coal.

The price to other consumers will be fixed in open competition. The lessees of the Batan coal land will have to compete for the Chinese market and for the Japanese market with coal mined in Japan and with coal mined in Australia. There is practically very little or no market in the Philippines for coal except for that bought by the United States Government and the Philippine government. Do you want Congress, by legislation in the United States, to attempt to fix the price at which Batan coal shall be sold in Japan and China in competition with the cheaply produced coal of Japan and Australia? How can this be done? Is this a sound business suggestion? Gentlemen know that it is not. It is only an appeal to prejudice, not to reason.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the difficulty with the gentleman's bill in the mind of the House has been it does not prescribe specifically that the parties shall have the right to pay a certain royalty on the coal going to other parties. That is the difficulty in the mind of the House. I do not think the House is against leasing the land. I do not think the House wants the Government to fix a price to other parties, but what they do want is to have it explicitly stated that there shall be a royalty on the mining of the coal that is mined for other parties in order to get full compensation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say in reply to that——

Mr. PAYNE. And I think the bill ought to go before the House in the Committee of the Whole and have full consideration of the House and be open for amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Committee on Insular Affairs did not deem it best to insert in the bill a provision absolutely requiring bids to include a royalty. But the bill does provide that the lease shall contain such other and further restrictions as the Secretary of War may see fit to impose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question was taken; and two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the bill was rejected.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES BONDS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16290) to postpone until 1937 the maturity of $250,000 of 4 per cent United States bonds held in trust for the benefit of the American Printing House for the Blind.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time of payment of the $250,000 of United States 4 per cent bonds, funded loan of 1907, inscribed "Secretary of the Treasury, trustee—interest to the Treasurer of the United States for credit of appropriation 'To promote the education of the blind,'" and issued under authority of the act of March 3, 1879, entitled "An act to promote the education of the blind," is hereby extended for the period of thirty years from the 1st day of July, 1907, at 4 per cent interest; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to indorse the fact of such extension upon said bonds.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to postpone for thirty years the maturity of a quarter of a million dollars of Government United States 4 per cent bonds. In 1879 the Congress of the United States appropriated a quarter of a million dollars of bonds in perpetuity for the benefit of the blind schools of America, and required that the income from these bonds should be paid annually to the American Printing House for the Blind. The American Printing House for the Blind prints embossed books which are used in the blind schools of the country. By the provisions of the act of 1879 this money must be used solely in the printing of these books, which are sold at cost, and which must be distributed pro rata among the public schools for the blind in the country.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman, Do I understand the Government of the United States gave $250,000 for that purpose? The Government gave a quarter of a million dollars of its own bonds for that purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Mr. PERKINS. First it gave the bonds, and then it gave the interest upon the bonds?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Now these bonds would have to be placed at a lower rate than 4 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Under the terms of the act, on the maturity of the bonds it is necessary that they be reinvested in Government securities. There are no Government securities which, if they be reinvested, will return an interest greater than 2 per cent.

Mr. PERKINS. The object of the bill is to postpone the maturity of these bonds for thirty years, so that this institution will still continue to get $10,000 per annum instead of $5,000 per annum. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is correct. The object of the bill is to continue the payment of $10,000 instead of reducing the payment to $5,000.

Mr. PERKINS. What is done with this money?

Mr. SHERLEY. The money is paid over annually to the American Printing House for the Blind. The American Printing House for the Blind is a corporation incorporated under an act of the State of Kentucky in 1858. Its board of directors is composed of the superintendents of the various State blind asylums throughout the country. This money is paid to this printing house to be used in printing embossed books for the blind, and one of the requirements is that these books shall be sold at cost and that they shall be distributed equally among all the blind asylums of the country.

Mr. PERKINS. What fund have they apart from this $10,000 given by the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. The State of Kentucky furnished the buildings, and they have since received by way of personal contributions something like $165,000, mostly to aid in religious instruction; but the demand now upon the printing house is so much larger than it was at the time this money was given that the reduction in interest will result in absolutely crippling this printing establishment for the blind.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the State of Kentucky contribute any money to the institution?

Mr. SHERLEY. The State of Kentucky originally contributed the money for the buildings and equipment, along with several other States. I want the gentleman to bear in mind that this is distinct from the blind schools. Kentucky supports at her own expense a blind asylum, as do most of the States of the Union. The cost of printing books for the blind is very great—so great that no commercial house can afford to engage in it. There is not sufficient demand to make it profitable. Now, in order to meet the demand for books that existed, which, while small, was imperative, the Government came to the aid of the American Printing House for the Blind and gave this money in trust.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Are these books distributed throughout the United States generally, or just in the State of Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. These books are distributed through the United States generally, and by the requirements of the act must be distributed pro rata according to the number of blind pupils in the different State schools.

Mr. SULZER. Are they charged for them?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are sold at cost.

Mr. PERKINS. How large is the annual income?

Mr. SHERLEY. The income is practically this $10,000 a year which they have received from the Government and the income received in part from the $165,000 privately contributed.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you receive any contributions from the public? I suppose that there would be contributions received from outside sources.

Mr. SHERLEY. The American Printing House for the Blind would be very glad to receive contributions, but up to this time it has only received this $165,000.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, the Government practically pays the entire expense of this charity. That is what it comes to.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Government did this: The Government furnished a quarter of a million of dollars for the benefit of this charity, and the State——

Mr. PERKINS. On which it pays $10,000 a year interest——

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). And the State of Kentucky furnished the buildings and original equipment. Not a dollar of the expenditure for the buildings and equipment has been paid out of the Government fund.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman think, as this is a very useful charity, that it ought to be possible to get from the country at large some assistance outside of the $10,000 which the Government pays; and that those in charge of the institution ought to be able to obtain contributions from various sources instead of as it has done for about twenty-five years?

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe if this matter were brought to the attention of the country at large, there would probably be contributions made.

Mr. PERKINS. Why do you not bring it to the attention of the country?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not one of the directors. The question here is whether the Government shall destroy one-half of the income given by it for the benefit of this institution.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If these books are sold at cost, what do they do with this money?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are sold at cost, considering this money as subtracting that much from the cost of the books. If they did not have this money, and had to sell at actual cost, then the cost of the books would be so great as to be almost prohibitory.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman might amend his statement by making it below cost.

Mr. SHERLEY. I used the phrase contained in the original act. What was there meant and what I mean is that no profit is made on the books. The $10,000 simply enables them to sell the books at a less price than they could sell without it. The following letter from the head of the American Printing House for the Blind, Prof. B. B. Huntoon, concisely states the case:

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 12, 1906.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: As Secretary Shaw has suggested and advised bringing in a bill extending for thirty years the bonds of $250,000, at 4 per cent, held in trust by him, to promote the education of the blind, as being by far more preferable to increasing the fund to $500,000, at 2 per cent, permit me to remind you that in 1879, though Congress had made large benefactions of land and money to aid the education of almost every other class, nothing had ever been done for the blind.

All the thirty State schools for the blind in the country unanimously petitioned Congress, setting forth the fact that their great need was a supply of embossed books, as, while the need was imperative, the demand was so small that there was no inducement for private enterprise to do this printing; and, in fact, at that time there were barely two score embossed books in the country.

Congress acceded to the petition and stipulated that no portion of the aid given should be spent on land or buildings, but that the endowment for printing books for the blind should be perpetual, and as the bonds matured they should be refunded in other interest-bearing United States bonds.

Now, the State schools for the blind are forty in number, and their pupils, which in 1879 had a population of 2,100, now have 4,400.

The educators of the blind look in dismay upon the prospect of their resources for printing embossed books being cut in half at the time when their needs are more than doubled.

The State of Kentucky, at an expense of $30,000, gave the land, erected the buildings, and supplied the plant for carrying out the beneficent work of embossing books for the blind.

Every blind child at school at any school for the blind in the United States has been inestimably benefited by that act of Congress.

It is impossible to overstate the importance of this aid to the education of the blind. It has revolutionized the methods of their education. It has supplied up-to-date embossed text-books on all the subjects of a common school education, through the high school course, and, incidentally, has caused departments for blind readers to be established in the National Library, in Washington, and in over forty other public libraries.

No greater service can be done the education of the blind in this country than to continue unimpaired the work done at the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, Ky.

Yorus, very truly, B. B. HUNTOON.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say that this bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. Originally there was set aside $250,000 for this purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield the gentleman time, and I would like him to answer my question.

Mr. PAYNE. I will do so directly. It was originally given for the purpose of education. There was no way of printing these books by private enterprise. It is very costly to print in raised letters for the blind, and the United States Government set this money aside thirty years ago, to be invested in United States bonds, when they drew 4 per cent interest, which has been paid up to this time. Next year those bonds will only pay 2 per cent, which will cut that income in two. Now, the institution has been a very beneficent one.

The president of that institution is a native of my own town whom I have known always, and who is a splendid man, and so regarded in the State of Kentucky. This is not a Kentucky institution, but a national institution. After these books are printed they furnish them at cost to the blind. They furnish them at cost, Bibles to Bible societies, and books of that kind to missionary societies, and they have done a great deal of good in that way in the diffusion of information for the blind. Without this work the blind could not get it. Now, gentlemen ask why private resources are not drawn upon. They have not been able to get the money without this appropriation. If it is cut down now to $5,000 instead of $10,000, a great part of this work must cease. In order to continue the work it seems to be necessary to make this appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not understand why it is in this country, if this is so good a charity, when the contributions for charity are so large, that somebody besides the United States Government can not be found to chip in.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, I can not see why it is in this country that we have to appropriate Government money for experiment stations. I do not see why it is that we have to give money for the benefit of agricultural colleges. I do not see why private enterprise does not come forward and do all these things; but Congress has done it because private enterprise did not come forward and do it.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you think Congress should give generally to all the institutions for the blind over the country?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; I do not, and this is not asked for that reason. Aside from this they have an institution for the blind there in the State of Kentucky, conducted by private funds, a private enterprise, where people also go who are able to pay their tuition, but this is for work for which they have not been able to raise the necessary money otherwise.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me for several questions?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. This amount of $250,000 is substantially an obligation of the United States Government?

Mr. PAYNE. It was set aside and held in trust by the United States, invested in bonds drawing 4 per cent and running for thirty years, the interest being paid over to this institution. These bonds mature a year from next July.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If this bill should not pass, the $250,000 could be paid over to this institution and the bonds canceled, could they not?

Mr. PAYNE. Not without legislation by Congress.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But that could be accomplished by legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly; Congress could pay over the money.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not possible that the money could be invested by the institution at a rate of interest even higher than 4 per cent?

Mr. PAYNE. I think that would be difficult—to get a secure investment that would pay more than 4 per cent. I think it might be invested at 4 per cent.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is not every effort being made to reduce the rate of interest on Government bonds?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the gentleman knows as much about that as I do, of course.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. So that Government bonds are now issued at 2 per cent?

Mr. PAYNE. We have been reducing the rate of interest by requiring a deposit of national bonds for the issue of money without interest, and that is a reduction of the rate of interest.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does not the gentleman from New York think it is a dangerous precedent to continue a 4 per cent rate of interest on any amount of United States bonds for thirty years, when money can now be borrowed by the United States Government at 2 per cent?

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman means that as a question, intending to intimate that we may be liable to do the same thing in regard to other parts of the national debt, I say no. This is simply giving this money for the benefit of the blind people and for their education and for the printing of their books.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman will concede, however, that if the $250,000 was actually paid over to this institution it could be so invested as to bring an income at least equal to $10,000 a year?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the gentlemen in charge of this institution did not have the courage to ask that of Congress. They do ask, however, that this appropriation of $10,000 a year—for that is what it amounts to—be continued.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But suppose you should pay over the $250,000? These bonds are held in trust, and the question now presenting itself is whether they shall be paid or continued at a rate of interest twice as great as that which the Government is now paying on its other obligations. That is the question, is it not?

Mr. PAYNE. Let me say, in connection with that, that the statute provides that at the end of thirty years they shall be reinvested in other bonds of the United States.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That, however, could be readily amended, could it not?

Mr. PAYNE. It is competent for Congress to appropriate this $250,000, but that is not the bill before the House, however.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The question is whether that would not be a much better bill. It would afford just as much benefit to this institution, and at the same time relieve the Congress of the United States from donating $5,000 a year by continuing the maximum rate of interest on a quarter of million of bonds for a very long period.

Mr. PAYNE. That proposition was not presented to the committee, I suppose, out of the modesty of the gentlemen who had the matter in charge, who wanted to get this bill through.

Mr. COCKRAN. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if it be not the fact that if this measure now before the House fails, this subvention to the institution will fail altogether?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; they own the bonds.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not understand about that. That is what I want to know.

Mr. PAYNE. If this bill is not passed by this Congress it would not fail altogether, but it would be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to reinvest the fund in bonds bearing 2 per cent interest, so that $5,000 a year would fail.

Mr. COCKRAN. There is no other proposal before the House except this, is there?

Mr. PAYNE. This is the only thing before the House.

Mr. COCKRAN. So that the House must practically choose between continuing this subvention of $10,000 and cutting it down to $5,000?

Mr. PAYNE. Practically it would have that effect.

Mr. PERKINS. Or the House could adopt the other proposition which has been suggested here.

Mr. COCKRAN. But no such bill is presented to the House.

Mr. PERKINS. They could bring in such a bill. The suggestion is whether this is the best way of dealing with the question. If it is the best way, we ought to do it, but if there is a better way, certainly we ought to adopt that.

Mr. COCKRAN. But this is the only proposition now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

CERTAIN LANDS IN RICHARDSON COUNTY, NEBR.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2418) to enable the Indians allotted lands in severalty within the boundaries of drainage district No. 1, in Richardson County, Nebr., to protect their lands from overflow, and for the segregation of such of said Indians from their tribal relations as may be expedient, and for other purposes, with a House committee amendment.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to pay per capita to the Indians of the Sac and Fox tribe, of Missouri, allotted lands in severalty within the bounndaries of drainage district No. 1, in Richardson County, Nebr., the proportionate share of such Indians in the $157,000 "paper principal" remaining to the credit of said tribe under the second article of the treaty of October 21, 1837: Provided, That sufficient of the amount due said Indians shall be retained and expended by the Secretary of the Interior in paying the assessments that may be made by the said drainage district on the allotments of said Indians for the purpose of protecting the lands embraced in the drainage district from overflow, not exceeding $7 per acre, and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the per capita payments herein provided. If any surplus remain, it shall be credited to the remainder of the tribe.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to pay the assessments that may be made on the Sac and Fox tribal lands by said drainage district, not exceeding $7 per acre, and there is hereby appropriated for this purpose $7,000 to be deducted from the "paper principal" of $157,000: Provided, That the amount disbursed under the provisions of this section shall be reimbursed from the proceeds derived from the sale of said tribal lands.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the assessments on lands allotted to the Iowa Indians that may be made by said drainage district, not exceeding $7 per acre, and there is hereby appropriated for such purpose $2,600.

SEC. 4. That the said drainage district be, and it is hereby authorized to assess the cost of reclaiming the tribal lands of the Sac and Fox Indians, and all lands allotted to the Indians in severalty and held by patents containing restrictions as to sale, taxation, and alienation within said district, and to condemn any of said lands necessary for the purpose of reclamation in the same manner as said district may condemn other lands: Provided, That the payments to be made or the taking of lands under the provisions of this section shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, upon application, to issue a fee simple patent to any Indian for the lands allotted to him within said drainage district, and the issuance of such patent shall operate as a removal of all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of the lands covered thereby.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? If not, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

SURVEY OF MAIL AND PACK ROUTE IN ALASKA.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17510) to provide for a reconnoissance and preliminary survey of a land route for a mail and pack trail from the navigable waters of the Tanana River to the Seward Peninsula in Alaska, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $35,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for a reconnoissance and preliminary survey of a land route from the navigable waters of the Tanana River, at or near Fairbanks, to the vicinity of Council City, in the Seward Peninsula, Alaska, for a mail and pack trail along such route, such sum to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; report of said survey and reconnoissance to be made to Congress at the earliest practicable day.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what committee reports this bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Committee on Territories.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not know; the bill was referred to the Committee on Territories and has been considered for nearly two months. We had before us Major Richardson, of the Ninth Infantry, who came here from Alaska, and we also had a statement from the Secretary of War.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the report a unanimous report?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is a unanimous report, recommended by the entire committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is rather unusual, is it not, to have a provision come in in this way providing for a survey of the river——

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is not a survey of the river; it is a preliminary survey of a land route for a mail and pack trail from the Tanana River to the Seward Peninsula, in Alaska.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I misunderstood the reading of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an appropriation of $35,000 for a reconnoissance and preliminary survey of a land route from the navigable waters of the Tanana River at or near Fairbanks to the vicinity of Council City, in the Seward Peninsula, for a mail and pack trail along such route, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. After leaving the vicinity of Fairbanks and going in a northwestern direction the proposed survey will cross the Yukon at some point between the mouth of the Tanana and Rampart, thence generally in a westward direction by way of the middle Koyukuk and the head of Norton Bay to the vicinity of Council City. The distance is about 700 miles, and is mainly through an unexplored country. The expenditure contemplated by the bill is strictly for exploration work, and in this respect the bill differs from other legislation relative to road and trail improvements in Alaska, and is designed to procure information needed by the Executive Departments, Congress, and the public at large. The starting point is mentioned as at Fairbanks, but the principal work of the reconnoissance lies between the crossing of the Yukon and the head of Norton Bay, a country but little known.

The immediate result sought to be obtained by the passage of this bill is: The establishment of a shorter mail route to the Seward Peninsula; the improvement of the service in lessening the time by from eighteen to twenty days from Fairbanks to Nome, and when the trail is completed from Valdez to Fairbanks, and the whole in good condition, the service from Seattle should be reduced one-half over the old route by Skagway and the upper Yukon.

During the visit of the subcommittee of the Committee on Territories of the Senate, in the summer of 1903, one of the resolutions adopted by the citizens of Nome set forth the following statement of the condition of the mail service to that section:

> The distance from seaboard at Skagway to Nome is about 2,000 miles, over which distance the mail is now hauled by dog teams and sleds on a schedule of sixty days' time, thus placing us during nearly eight months of the year at a decided disadvantage of having to wait one hundred and twenty days, or four months, from date of a letter until it would be possible to receive a reply. This does not allow for delays on this long route, which are frequent and unavoidable owing to storms, during which travel is difficult and dangerous to life and often impossible. * * * The importance of this section of Alaska demands the best and quickest mail service possible for the Government to furnish.

Though three years have expired since this statement was made to the committee, yet little has been done to remedy this inconvenience, save the work which is now in progress and destined to continue under the provisions of the act of Congress creating the "Alaska fund," and the appropriation likely to be made at the present session of Congress to be expended in the construction of the new trail from Valdez to Fairbanks, under the directions of the board of road commissioners, detailed by the Secretary of War. In 1899 the work of building a road from Valdez to Eagle was undertaken by the Government, and considerable money has been expended in bridging streams and laying out a trail through the forests and over the mountains, and on this trail the mails are now carried from Valdez to Eagle.

It further appears from the report of the committee recommending the passage of this bill, that as the mail service on the old route follows the Tanana, then the Yukon to Kaltag, crosses to Unalaklik on the Bering Sea coast, and then skirts around the head of Norton Bay and continues along the coast to Nome, that the advantages of an all-land route are the avoidance of the necessary delays every year during the formation of the ice in the fall and the breaking-up period in the spring—a more direct route by cutting off the bends of the rivers and coast lines; and safer travel by escaping in great measure the storms which sweep up and down the rivers and along the shores of Bering Sea.

Independent of the improved mail facilities, to which this region is entitled by the construction of a trail that should follow the proposed survey, will be the information necessarily obtained through this work as to the wealth and resources of this wonderful land, and the best means through which its development may be hastened, and the Executive, the Congress, and the different Departments of Government should, at the earliest possible date, be placed in possession of the much-needed data, when so many different interests are clamoring here for recognition or aid through legislation in various forms. Territorial government has been demanded, but the committee in charge of this measure has not yet seen proper to give it favorable consideration, but instead the Congress has passed the bill providing for a Delegate to represent and speak for Alaska and present her claims to the favor of the National Government. Bills for the protection and development of her fisheries have received favorable recognition by enactment into law, but legislation looking to aid in railroad building is suspended chiefly because of the want of intelligent information as to what course, if any, should be pursued in that direction. When the Honorable Secretary of War was before the House Committee on Territories, in reply to interrogatories relative to the bills pending before the committee proposing aid to the existing and contemplated railroads, so much needed for the development of Alaska, and it was suggested by the committee whether his statement was not to the effect that the wise thing to do should be for the committee to wait until it gets a little more information, he said:

I think it is wise to get information at any rate, because if you were to confer power on the Executive to guarantee bonds, he would have to take time to get information. He could not act unless he ascertained the circumstances which would justify his using the power which Congress might give him of incurring governmental liability in guaranteeing bonds.

And again he stated:

I presume the route from the coast to the Tanana district is fairly well known now from reconnoissance surveys; but from the Tanana district to Rampart, and from Rampart to the Nome Peninsula, I think certainly ought to be investigated by competent Army engineers before action should be taken by the Executive.

Much stress was laid before the committee upon the duty of Congress to respond to the recommendations of the President in two of his messages favoring the extension of national aid to the building of railroads in Alaska, and in the original bill offered to Congress upon the subject-matter of the pending measure, there was contained a provision for an expenditure to obtain information looking to legislation for governmental aid to Alaskan railroad building. But as the committee was not prepared to commit itself to the project of governmental aid, it was not thought wise to report the bill with the provision before referred to, and it was, in consequence, omitted. The bill, therefore, stands upon the sole and important recommendation for its passage as a necessity for extending and improving the mail facilities of that region, with the resulting advantages of putting the Government and the public at large in possession of all the facts needed for railroad or other developments, when and in whatever manner needed. But as an evidence that this measure, which he has reported with the unanimous sanction of the committee, has the support of executive authority, it is only necessary to refer to the testimony of Secretary Taft before our committee, in which he said:

I think it very important that there should be an appropriation of $25,000 to make a preiiminary survey for Rampart. I think that is very important, whether you have governmental aid or not. I think it is the business of the Government to open up Alaska and to furnish certain knowledge upon which investments could be invited.

The Secretary of War, in transmitting a memorandum prepared by Maj. W. P. Richardson, Ninth Infantry, president of the Alaska board of road commissioners, recommends the passage of this bill, and states:

Such a survey would be of great value to the work of ordinary road and trail construction, outlining the most direct route to the Seward Peninsula.

The same view was supported by the Secretary in his letter to the subcommittee in charge of the bill, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 27, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. REYNOLDS: I am advised that Major Richardson will appear before your committee this morning to testify as to the necessity for an appropriation to enable the Department to make a railroad survey in Alaska from the vicinity of Fairbanks to Rampart, and thence from Rampart, through the Nome Peninsula, to the Bering Straits, in the vicinity of Nome. I can not urge the necessity for an appropriation for this purpose too strongly, and I hope the committee will be liberal in its provision. When I was before the committee I suggested $25,000, but after talking with Major Richardson I am convinced that it will require $50,000 in order to secure a proper investigation of the proposed route, so as to enable the committee and Congress to act intelligently at the next session.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. JOHN M. REYNOLDS,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Territories,
House of Representatives.

The committee, however, reported the bill carrying $35,000, instead of $50,000 as recommended in this letter.

It can not be doubted that the survey of this mail and pack trail is but the blazing of the way for greater and more enduring progress-promoting instrumentalities in the shape of wagon roads and railway lines, which are bound to follow, and which will open to the world's gaze what is believed to be a treasure house of wealth unequaled by the possessions of any other nation or of any other portion of our splendid domain.

No better illustration of this contention can be found than in the developments, actual and prospective, that have followed the surveys made in 1898 and 1899 by Captain Abercrombie up the Copper River, and of Captain Glenn up the Sushitna, and the survey of a route for a wagon road in the summer of 1904 from Valdez to Eagle City, on the Yukon. In consequence of this work so wisely inaugurated by the Government and the additional work now being done on the trail from Valdez to Fairbanks, the region south of the Yukon is rapidly becoming well known, its immense wealth demonstrated, and capital has been encouraged to eagerly seize the opportunity for gigantic returns. And more than this, the laying out of these Government trails has promoted the exploration of other avenues of entrance, through individual effort, into the southern and interior portions of Alaska. A further advantage to be derived from this reconnoissance is the information it will give concerning the intervening section of country between the crossing of the Yukon and the Seward Peninsula, known generally as the "Koyukuk district." This district is rather more isolated than the rest of Alaska, and with the difficulties of transportation and communication has made but little advance. Only the richest discoveries could be worked, but these have produced in the neighborhood of $1,000,000; and it is known that the region of the upper Koyukuk, north of and tributary to this proposed route, embraces many hundreds of square miles of gold-bearing gravels.

The appropriation asked for in this instance is no mere experiment in the light of past results, and its expenditure will be intrusted to worthy and competent management. It will doubtless be under the control and administration of the board of road commissioners of Alaska, headed by Maj. W. P. Richardson, Ninth Infantry, its president, whom the Secretary of War has commended so highly and deservedly, and whose appearance and testimony before our committee, as well as the extent and character of his work in that region, have so fully justified all that has been said to his credit.

The governor of Alaska, in his last report, said upon this subject:

Section 2 of the act of January 27, 1905, supra, provides for a board of road commissioners, to be composed of Army officers and to be appointed by the Secretary of War. When the appointments were made, Maj. W. P. Richardson was assigned chief place. This officer had had long acquaintance in Alaska, since the winter of 1897, and his appointment to the first place was eminently proper. The board, after its organization, early in the season, went to work. They provided for the location and survey of a wagon road from the head of Chalmondeley Sound to Hetta Inlet, on Prince of Wales Island; for a survey of a road from Haines Mission to "Hindestucy," on the Chilkat, to Wells, with a survey of the trail from Wells to the boundary line, near Pleasant Camp; for the collection of data for a route, yet to be determined, from the head of Gastineau Channel to a point near the southern extremity of Berners Bay; for the work of relocation and improvement of the trail from Valdez to the mouth of the Gokona River, thence by way of the head of the Big Delta to the Tanana, and down that stream to Fairbanks; for such work of improvement as the funds permitted on the roads leading from the terminus of the Tanana Mines Railway, at Gilmore, to the Summit, and thence to Clary Creek, and from the Summit to Fairbanks Creek; for the preliminary reconnoissance and location of a road from Council City to the east fork of Solomon River, and a road from Nome northward by way of the head of Nome River and toward the Kougrok River.

The board received but $28,000 from the Alaska fund. It can be seen and appreciated by those who are familiar with Alaska that the board has not been asleep. They have taken in a large part of the field, and know the places where work should be done at the earliest opportunity. They are hampered for funds. It would probably be better for Congress to estimate the probable amount for roads from the "Alaska fund" and make it available, so that the board could have it at its command during the summer, which is the best season for work. This is the right way to help Alaska. It will relieve the newcomers of much of the fearful hardships which have been endured by prospectors and miners.

The duty of the Government to bestow its favor on Alaska through the insignificant sum named in this bill—insignificant and almost unworthy of us in view of the vast resources of that country and the returns which she has made to our national wealth, as well as to the National Treasury—will appear more pressing and obligatory when the extent of population, development, and needs of the section to be linked by the survey are studied and demonstrated. The two principal districts outside of the archipelago of southeastern Alaska are the middle Tanana and upper Yukon and the Seward Peninsula. These districts have in each about 12,000 inhabitants. The first, as has already been stated, has been developed, largely through similar expenditures to the one contemplated by this bill, from Valdez and Cook Inlet, and the second, on account of its accessibility from the coast of Bering Sea. These two districts yielded last season $12,000,000 in gold in about equal amounts for each district. Independent of the rapid development which will follow in the intermediate region by the construction of this contemplated mail and pack trail, the Nome Peninsula on the one side and the Tanana and Yukon region on the other will become more closely joined by the bands of commercial intercourse to which the population and wealth of the regions are justly entitled, and especially will it be so by a perfect winter mail service between the country tributary to Nome and to Fairbanks.

It appeared from testimony taken before the committee that the necessity for an all-year mail service by land arose from the fact that during four months in the year the Department aims to carry the mail by steamboats in summer, either by way of Skagway or St. Michael, and thus during this period the overland trail is neglected and closed, which results in this difficulty: That from the 15th of April, when the sun begins to melt and traveling becomes difficult, and until late in June, when steamers begin to run regularly, the mail service is entirely stopped or interrupted. The same condition exists in the fall. The steamers cease running some time in September and the rivers do not freeze until late in November. Thus, every year—spring and fall—the mail service becomes interrupted. It is, therefore, claimed by those entitled to judge that if the first-class mail were carried overland all the year round, the contractor would have employment for his men and animals during the summer months and thus would be in better shape to do the work in spring and fall.

The appropriation asked for in this instance is really far below what should be given to properly do the work. The statement made by ex-Senator Turner, of Washington, before the committee showed that last year's surveys along the Alaska Central cost $22,000. The preliminary surveys from Resurrection Bay to Fairbanks, a distance of about 436 miles, cost the original company about $96,000, according to the testimony of Mr. W. B. Poland, the chief engineer. This great expense arises from the difficulty of taking supplies into the interior—the price of wages and the cost of maintaining it when in the field. It was further stated that the cost of surveying in Alaska was something tremendous. To equip a party of fifteen men, which is the least number required, costs about two to three thousand dollars; the running expenses will amount to $1,800 per month, so that the total cost of a surveying party can ordinarily be stated at $10,000 for a single season.

But the General Government, by this expenditure and much more to which she is justly entitled, will be giving for Alaska's development only a portion of what is her own. The subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Territories, upon their trip to Alaska in 1903, made a most exhaustive inquiry into conditions after visiting all the principal points in the interior and along the coast. The result was summed up in a report which, for thoroughness, can not be overestimated. The conclusion reached was, that placing Alaska's receipts from customs, internal revenues, tax on sealskins, licenses of various sorts, and other revenues of minor importance against the expenditures legitimately chargeable thereto, deducting for expenses only such items as it assumes and pays in all the Territories of the United States, where a Territorial government has been established, the account for 1903 would stand: Receipts, $468,017.04; expenses, $138,506.22; or a balance of $329.510.82, which the committee stated, in their opinion, should be devoted to internal improvements, which will tend to develop the district.

In the same report it is stated that the resources of Alaska are indicated in part by the fact that since the cession she has yielded in revenues to the General Government nearly $10,000,000, a sum greater by nearly $1,000,000 than the entire expenditure made in her behalf. The committee further stated that up to 1903 it had been estimated that the nation had been enriched by the fur industry to the extent of $52,000,000; that the value of the salmon taken in Alaskan fisheries had been $50,000,000. To this may be added the output of gold, including that estimated by the Bureau of the Mint for last year at $14,650,000, and the previous year $9,160,500, or a total to 1906 of $77,650,100 as the gold product of Alaska since 1880, making a grand total of over $180,000,000, not including the salmon fisheries and the fur industry for 1904–5 of more than $20,000,000 additional, and not counting the profits on our trade with Alaska, which a high authority in 1904 estimated at $25,000,000.

And yet Alaska, with this wonderful showing, is still in her infancy in point of development. In ten years more her mineral output will be five times as great as now, with her population of 60,000, as at present, grown to a quarter of a million or more.

The great, all-powerful, and pressing need of the hour for Alaska's development is the means of cheap and easy transportation. Through governmental assistance on a limited scale the slightest glimpse has but been had into the hidden wealth of this vast country of 577,000 square miles—one-sixth the area of our present domain, or almost as large as all that vast territory of the Republic east of the Mississippi River. But the moment it is possible to transport supplies from the coast into the interior at reasonable prices the cost of living will be greatly reduced, the expenses of production curtailed to limits within which mining may be made profitable in every part of the Territory, instead of a condition existing, as at present, where such expenses are so high as to render all effort at development prohibitive.

The situation with respect to means of transportation can not be better stated than as set forth in the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Territories of the Senate, dated January 12, 1904, wherein it is said:

> The condition of Alaska in her vastness is best described by the fact that outside the few and scattered settlements called towns, which are found in different parts of Alaska proper and most of which are but the centers of mining interests, there is not to be found a single public wagon road over which vehicles can be drawn summer or winter. The only approach to one is the military trail extending from Valdez, on the Pacific, to Eagle, on the Yukon, constructed by the War Department in 1899–1900. This, however, is only fit for saddle and pack animals. Transportation during the summer is conducted almost wholly on the waterways and on pack horses and during the long winter months by the use of dog teams upon trails broken out in the snow or ice for that purpose.
> The development of Alaska depends more upon the improvement of transportation facilities than upon any other one instrumentality. It must be borne in mind that substantially everything consumed by the people and everything required to carry on business must be brought in from the outside. A glance at the map will clearly indicate the immense distances which have been traversed.
>
> Nome, although situated 2,550 miles from Seattle and 2,880 miles from San Francisco, receives her supplies at fairly reasonable prices, owing to the fact that regular lines of steamships are plying between the points indicated and in competition with each other.
>
> It is also true that all places in southeastern Alaska are well served by different lines of boats running between Seattle and Skagway, a distance of 1,000 miles, as stops are made at intermediate points.
>
> The situation upon the Yukon and upon her great tributaries is, however, entirely different and one fraught with great hardship to the people. All goods intended for use in the entire Yukon Basin, if brought over American routes, must be taken in ocean-going vessels to St. Michael, a distance of 2,550 miles from Seattle and 2,780 from San Francisco, and there be transferred to river boats and transported against the current of the stream to the various points along the river. From St. Michael to Rampart it is 950 miles, to Circle 1,310 miles, to Eagle 1,500 miles.
> When it is considered that supplies of every description must be brought in from the outside during the three or four months of open navigation and stored for future use, it can be easily understood why, with freight, interest, and insurance added to the original cost of the goods, prices should be exceedingly high. When to these prices is added the additional cost of packing goods from river points to the interior, where mining operations are going on, or having them transported during the winter months through the use of dog teams, no one will be surprised at the slow development of that great area lying south of the Yukon and west of the international boundary line.

In striking contrast with the policy pursued by our Government stands that pursued by the Dominion government in the British Yukon. Prior to the discoveries in the Klondike in 1896 and 1897 there was practically no settlement and no development in that country. But our authority, Mr. John Scudder McClain, in his books entitled "Alaska and the Klondike," written two years ago, says:

> But during the last five or six years, according to Mr. S. A. D. Bertrand, territorial superintendent of public works and buildings at Dawson, there has been expended in the Yukon territory $1,030,118 in the building of wagon roads. This represents the first cost of 875 miles of roads and winter trails, one-fourth of which is graded and surfaced wagon roads on which heavy loads may be drawn by teams of from two to ten or twelve horses, and over which it is possible now to move heavy mining machinery at any time of the year as easily as it could be done over the roads of central New York.

Since then this expenditure has been largely increased.

The method pursued in the Yukon is briefly this: The territorial government determines where roads shall be built and makes an estimate of the cost. This estimate is presented to the Dominion parliament at Ottawa, and an appropriation is made for that purpose. They do not wait in the British Yukon until the burden of settlement has been borne by the people at the great expense which the absence of passable roads implies, but whenever a discovery is made which promises to be of importance and gives evidence of permanence, engineers are sent out to survey a route for a wagon road and men are put to work on its construction. The cost of living in the Klondike camps, taking all things into account, but crediting the reduction chiefly to good roads, has been reduced to one-fourth what it was five years before these roads were built. What this means for the development of a country can hardly be overestimated. Of course, no country can be developed where the charges of transportation run from $2 to $10 per ton-mile, or from $300 to $600 per ton, as in many portions of Alaska under the present methods of transportation, unless the mining claims were fabulously rich.

As a justification for the action of the Government in constructing trails in Alaska, we have the precedent of the work done in the Philippine Islands, which, though originally constructed as a military necessity, have now become important to the commerce of the country, and led to its opening in other directions. Our obligations to Alaska are greater than to the Philippines, and the returns will be a hundredfold more to the nation's wealth, for the moment that transportation is cheapened thousands of square miles of gravel not now workable at a profit will be gathered up to enrich the world and quicken the arteries of trade and commerce.

In the early period of excitement over the discovery of rich findings of gold in the Yukon and Nome regions the impression prevailed that Alaska was a region of placer mining, and that the population seeking her borders had no other interest in view than that of extracting her gold from the earth, shipping it to the mints, pocketing the proceeds, and then leaving the country. But further explorations and developments have given the world undoubted assurance that her mineral deposits are of an extent and value to give employment for an indefinite time, yielding adequate returns, and that the soil and climate are such as to insure a permanent white population. If these things be true, then no expenditure by the Government in aid of Alaska's development will be for only a day, but for the centuries to come.

As to her mineral wealth, the gold production alone has grown from two and a half millions in 1898 to fourteen and a half millions in 1905. In the Nome region some 5,000 square miles are known to carry gold-bearing gravels, while in the Yukon Basin the area of the same is probably several times as large. The future of Alaska is not dependent upon her placer mining, but there are large areas of gold-bearing quartz, and even the very low-grade ores are worked at a profit on an immense scale, notably the Treadwell mines on Douglas Island across from Juneau, where the ore ranges from $2 to $7 per ton, and where, since 1882, it is said that an aggregate of $22,000,000, three times as great as the original cost of Alaska, have been taken from one mine alone. With railroad transportation, it is estimated that the present production of gold might just as easily be $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 per year, and rival the like output of South Africa, and continue it for an indefinite period.

Next in mineral importance, possibly, is her copper deposits, and it was testified before the committee that in five years there will be a production of more than eight and one-half millions' worth each year. The richest deposits are mainly in the Prince William Sound and Copper River districts, though valuable deposits are found elsewhere, where there is said to be the richest copper ore in quantity that has ever been found in the world, and the statement has been made from reliable sources that when the copper deposits of the Copper River country begin to be developed and put upon the market the mines of Butte and the Calumet and Hecla would have to go out of business.

Alaska is rich in coal, which is well distributed over the whole area. The known coal fields include about 16,000 square miles, though a conservative estimate places the coal-bearing rocks at 100,000 square miles, and fall in four groups—those of the Pacific seaboard, those of Bering Sea, those lying near the Arctic Ocean, and those of the Yukon Basin. The railroads projected from Seward, from Valdez, and from Controller Bay are designed to tap the rich coal deposits of the Matanuska and Kayak districts. It was represented before the committee that the coal deposits, of which there was knowledge only in a general way, have proven to be of as good quality as some of the highest grades of bituminous coal found in the United States and Wales. Some of it is equal to the Pocahontas coal, which is used by the United States Navy. There is sufficient now already opened up to assure a production of 15,000,000 tons of this high-grade coal, and 33,000,000 tons of medium coal, which is better than that now used on the Pacific coast and at Vancouver. The coal fields reached from Controller Bay are said to have veins varying from 3 and 4 feet up to 76 feet, with more than twenty separate and distinct veins in the field.

Every known mineral exists in Alaska, including tin in quantity, silver, petroleum, gypsum, and marble. While the first thought concerning Alaska is her wealth in minerals, the opening of the territory through exploration work of the character contemplated by this bill will reveal her hidden wealth in all its richness and fullness. Then the settlement of the country by sturdy farmers and homesteaders will be a matter promptly following, giving to them a market for the products of their farms, with which no other country can compete. In this respect the situation of the Alaskan farmer will be unique. A market controlled by the law of supply and demand, with prices regulated by the cost of production, limited only by the margin below which it will be unprofitable for outsiders to compete; with an abundance of the finest fishes in her seas, her rivers, and her lakes, and with game everywhere in her forests and on her hills and valleys, where nature has so bountifully reared and protected it, it seems that no other country on earth is more inviting to these sturdy pioneers of brave heart and indomitable purpose to go forth and assist in the founding of an empire. [Loud applause.]

The agricultural area of Alaska is conservatively estimated at 100,000 square miles, of which 30,000 are in the great valley of the Yukon—which may be utilized for culture and grazing—10,000 in the valley of the Kuskokwin and its tributaries, 15,000 in the valley of the Sushitna and its tributaries, 15,000 in the valley of the Tanana, 15,000 in the Copper River Valley, and 15,000 along the coast region, particularly that of the Southwest.

The basis of Alaska's prosperity, like that of our own, is in her agricultural possibilities. When transportation facilities shall open her mines and when her lands are settled by a hardy race of industrious tillers of the soil, supporting themselves and those who are developing her mineral resources, then shall her permanent prosperity and her identity as an empire among the sovereign States of our Union become a recognized fact. Were it not for the hope of her agricultural future, founded upon the adaptability of her soil and climate, the region could awaken no other thought in our minds than that of one from whose rocks, rivers, and hills her minerals would be shipped only to enrich the world elsewhere, and leave the country to its icebergs, glaciers, snows, and storms, and the remnants of a rapidly disappearing race of inferior type of men and women.

The conditions in Alaska, with respect to her agriculture, have been compared with that of Finland, the southern boundary of which is on the sixtieth parallel and its area just about one-fourth that of Alaska, with agriculture, stock raising, and dairying as the occupation of her 3,000,000 people. The inquiry has therefore been made: If Finland can support 3,000,000 people under the same climatic conditions as those prevailing in Alaska and on one-fourth the area of Alaska, without the enormous mineral wealth and the wealth of the sea and her great inland rivers (for, mark you, the value of Alaska's product from her fisheries last year are said to be $11,000,000, or nearly the equivalent of her production in gold), why is it not possible for her to support a population of two or three times that of Finland?

Will the climatic and agricultural conditions of Alaska support a population so permanent in character as to warrant expenditures on the part of the Government in the effort to afford better facilities for intercommunication, and to unify them in their social and political relations?

This question has been answered fully in a letter, dated February 17, 1906, of the Secretary of Agriculture upon Alaska's agricultural possibilities, to Mr. John E. Ballaine, who appeared before the committee, in which Secretary Wilson says:

> The day will come when your railroads will get more money from carrying agricultural products and what grows out of that business than it will from carrying the products of the mines. There is a great future for Alaska along agricultural lines. The Scandinavian Peninsula has been for a thousand years of necessity an agricultural country.

On page 24 of the report of Mr. G. H. Eldridge, of the Geological Survey, submitted in 1898, he says:

> In many localities in the Sushitna Valley native grasses, including the blue stem of the Northern States, grow profusely. There are rich meadows of native hay. At Tyonek rye and oats grew to full head last season, the grain having been dropped along the gravelly beach by prospectors early in May.

And these views are supported by the statements of men conversant with the region, who stand high in the social, political, and business life of the nation, showing that there are large areas of tillable and arable lands, and that the climate is more favorable in Alaska than in Norway, and that the valleys of the Matanuska, the Sushitna, and the Tanana rivers are equal in productiveness to the lands of Iowa or Ohio.

The same area in northwestern Europe that would be opened up by a thousand miles of railroad built from the coast to the interior rivers of Alaska contains a population of not less than 16,000,000, confined between latitudes of 60° and 64°, including the southern portion of the Scandinavian Peninsula, all of Finland, and part of Russia, and farther removed, too, from the Gulf stream than towns in central Alaska are from the Japan current. Fairbanks is 350 miles inland from the Japan current, which is as much larger than the Gulf stream as the Pacific is larger than the Atlantic; and, besides, there is less effect from the cold waters of the Arctic entering the Pacific, by reason of its restricted inlet throught Bering Straits, than is the case on the Atlantic side east of Greenland. And the temperature of the Pacific waters is much warmer than that of the Atlantic in the same latitudes.

As to the climate, from the middle of May until the 1st of October the average sunshine from the Pacific coast to the Tanana River is not less than eighteen hours out of the twenty-four. As a consequence of such sunshine, vegetables, grasses, and grains grow rapidly and in abundance.

On the southern coast there are few points where zero weather is ever recorded. The average winter weather at Seward, Sitka, and Juneau is milder and more even than in Washington. True, at Fairbanks they have had as low as 68° below zero, but that kind of weather continues for only a few days at a time; but then it is a very dry cold, not a breath of air stirring, the country being protected from winds by the mountain chains.

The agricultural possibilities refer specially to the Tanana Valley, which is 40 miles wide and 400 miles long; to the Copper River Valley, which is about 40 miles each way, and to the Sushitna, which is about 150 miles long by 100 miles wide. Of course, there are many other areas, though smaller, scattered over the Territory. In all these valleys below the 1,000-foot altitude grains will mature every season; above that the country is more adapted to grazing and stock raising.

The total area of the grass lands of the south Alaskan coast approximates 10,000 square miles. Nearly all of this lies between Cook Inlet and Unalaska. Of this total area, one-half at least is capable of utilization, and much of it is covered with tall and rank grasses often 6 feet high, the remainder on higher elevations furnishing splendid pasturages. In consequence it is believed that stock raising can be made a great success. The experiment station work at Sitka, Kenai, and Copper Center have demonstrated that cereals, vegetables, and fruits in great variety may be successfully grown in southern Alaska, and that thousands of acres in that region are adapted to farming.

Southeast Alaska and the Aleutian Islands are tempered by the Japan current flowing from east to west along the southern coast. North and west of the coast range the climate is healthful, invigorating, and dry. In southeast Alaska it is more mild than in other temperate regions of the same latitude.

Agricultural occupations will be confined to supplying the home markets, which, of course, are the richest markets because they are the highest priced, and from their location in that distant region they will be beyond the reach of such competition as can ever bring the prices of farm products below a fairly remunerative return. In the line of dairying, stock raising, and grain and vegetable growing there is no part of our possessions so advantageously situated for uniform and enriching prices as may be had in Alaska when transportation shall be provided and her mineral resources developed, for as to the mineral deposits they are not confined to the placers, as recent discoveries indicate that there are quartz properties of immense value. And so we might go on indefinitely to demonstrate the climatic, agricultural, and mineral advantages of Alaska, but, after all, the whole proposition of Alaska's future rests in her transportation facilities.

In this direction but little so far has been accomplished. In the whole domain there is in operation but 20 miles from Skagway to White Pass, being part of the White Pass and Yukon; 26 miles connecting Fairbanks with Chena, on the Tanana River; from Seward, on Resurrection Bay, about 20 miles operated by the Alaska Central; and in the Nome Peninsula there are about 45 miles in operation in summer; so that, besides the 45 miles on Seward Peninsula, there are 65 miles in other parts of Alaska.

In detail, the roads in operation, in process of construction, and contemplated will appear from the following memorandum furnished the honorable Secretary of War by Maj. W. P. Richardson, Ninth Infantry, president board of road commissioners of Alaska:

The railroad mileage in Alaska at present embraces the following:

1. A section 20 miles in length of the White Pass and Yukon route, from Skagway to the summit of White Pass, which is continued in Canadian territory to White Horse, and there connects with river navigation in summer and stage in winter for Dawson. No extensions of this road have been made since the summer of 1901.

2. At Valdez, preliminary work only, upon a proposed road from that point to the copper properties south of the Wrangell group of mountains, with possible extension to similar deposits reported on the Nebesna branch of the upper Tanana.

3. At Seward, Resurrection Bay, the Alaska Central Railroad (building), which reported late last season a probable completion of 50 miles by the end of 1905. The road, I understand, is heading for some point on the Tanana.

4. Tanana Mines Railway, 26 miles, constructed last season, connecting Fairbanks with Chena, on the Tanana River, and creeks in the vicinity.

5. On the Seward Peninsula (Nome district), the Nome-Arctic Railway, extending from the town of Nome something over 20 miles into the peninsula northward toward the head of Nome River and the Kongorok district.

6. The Solomon River road, from the mouth of Solomon River (35 miles east of Nome) up the said river and toward Council City, the proposed terminus, 17 miles of which are now completed.

7. The Council City and Ophir Creek road, from Council to mining claim No. 15, Ophir, about 8 miles.

Of these various roads, the Alaska Central and the Solomon River roads are standard, the others narrow gauge. The roads in the Nome district operate at present only during the summer season. The White Pass and Yukon is operated continuously and is in excellent condition for all kinds of traffic.

While Congress so far has shown no inclination to give aid to Alaska railroad building, yet it should do nothing to retard it. Our neighbors in the north, the Dominion government, realize the importance of the game they are playing in constructing the Grand Trunk Pacific along a line 300 to 400 miles north of the Canadian Pacific to its western terminus at Port Simpson, only 4 miles south of the Alaskan boundary and stretching ultimately into the Yukon Valley. The road from Skagway to White Pass in two years transferred the trade of the region tributary to it to Vancouver and to British Columbia. This new transcontinental line, with its many advantages over its American competitors, in that it will run under one management from ocean to ocean, connecting with steamers at both ends, running over level and well-traveled regions on plains adapted to wheat growing, with coal and timber near by and with the shortest route to the Orient, will be a strong competitor for the immense Alaskan trade, present and prospective, if we do not awaken to the importance of her interests. The first small thing to be done is to remove without delay the license charge of $100 levied on each mile of operated road in the Territory, at least until the roads are completed and paying fixed charges of operation and interest on their bonded debt.

Thus far we have presented Alaska on her material side with her wealth in gold, silver, coal, and copper; in her forests of profitable timber; in the returns from her fur-bearing animals of sea and woods, and from her fisheries of salmon and whale, cod and halibut, and with her fertile valley adapted to homes for millions of freemen.

But Alaska is more. She is the home of as energetic, courageous, honorable, and liberty-loving band of pioneers as ever became the pillars of a State.

Her invigorating climate, her matchless scenery, her wonders in glaciers and rivers, in cascades and lakes, and all else, from the warming influences of the Japan current and the glories of the midnight sun, to the grandeur of her mountain peaks and the primitive solitude of her unexplored areas, stretching from the tempered waters of the south to the frozen seas of the north, all combine to make a wonderland as enchanting as elsewhere set in the realms of space.

No short-sighted policy should guide our actions in the affairs of Alaska's growth, but with an eye single to the achievements that await her we should read her future in the light of the amazing prophecy of Secretary Seward, who nearly forty years in advance of his time explored the shifting currents of commerce, and, with the vision of a seer, saw the struggle of nations for the mastery of the Pacific, when he proclaimed to the American people:

Who does not see that henceforth every year European commerce, European politics, European thoughts, and European activities, although actually gaining greater force, and European connections, although actually becoming more intimate, will nevertheless ultimately sink in importance, while the Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the vast regions beyond will become the chief theater of events in the world's "great hereafter."

[Loud applause.]

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LOAN OF NAVAL EQUIPMENT TO CERTAIN MILITARY SCHOOLS.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 14975) amending chapter 863, volume 31, of the Statutes at Large.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 863, volume 31, of the Statutes at Large, approved March 3, 1901, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to loan naval equipment to certain military schools, and now the law in force, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon the application of the governor of any State having seacoast line or bordering on one or more of the Great Lakes, to direct the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to one well-established military school in that State, desiring to afford its cadets instruction in elementary seamanship, one fully equipped man-of-war's cutter for every twenty-five cadets in actual attendance, and such other equipment as may be spared and be deemed adequate for instruction in elementary seamanship: Provided, That the said school shall have adequate facilities for cutter drill, and shall have in actual attendance at least 140 cadets in uniform receiving military instruction and quartered in barracks under military regulation, and shall have the capacity to quarter and educate at the same time 150 cadets: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. How does this change existing law?

Mr. BRICK. The law as it stands allows the loan of one cutter for every fifty students. This reduces the number to twenty-five. That is the only change.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the reason for the change?

Mr. BRICK. The reason is that it has been found that where naval instructions have been given that one boat does not have sufficient facilities for every fifty students, but that one boat for every twenty-five students would greatly facilitate the instruction of seamanship in the schools where they have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Fifty students makes it too crowded.

Mr. BRICK. Too much crowded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the demand for a second.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

TIME OF HOLDING CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16386) to fix the time of holding the circuit and district court for the northern district of West Virginia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress approved January 22, 1901, entitled "An act to divide the State of West Virginia into two judicial districts," as relates to the time of holding the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia be amended so as to read as follows: "Regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia shall begin at the following times and places in each year:

"At Wheeling, on the first Tuesday of April and third Tuesday of September; at Clarksburg, on the third Tuesday of April and first Tuesday of October; at Martinsburg, on the second Tuesday of May and third Tuesday of October; at Philippi, on the fourth Tuesday of May and first Tuesday of November. And the circuit and district courts shall be held at Parkersburg beginning on the second Tuesday of January and second Tuesday of June of each year: Provided, That a place for holding said courts at Philippi shall be furnished to the Government free of cost by the county of Barbour until other provision is made therefor by law."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

SITTINGS OF THE CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5489) to provide for sittings of the circuit and district courts of the southern district of Florida in the city of Miami in said district.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the times and places now fixed by law for the sitting of the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Florida there shall be a session of the said circuit court in the city of Maimi on the fourth Monday in April in each year hereafter.

SEC. 2. That there shall be a regular term of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida in the city of Miami on the fourth Monday in April in each year hereafter.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

FIXING THE TIME FOR HOLDING THE CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19150) to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the middle district of Tennessee, in the southern division of the eastern district of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and the northeastern division of the eastern district of Tennessee at Greeneville, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the middle district of Tennessee, held at Nashville, shall commence on the first Monday in May and October of each year instead of the third Monday in April and October, as now provided by law; and the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Chattanooga, shall commence on the first Monday in April and December of each year; and the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northeastern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Greeneville, shall commence on the first Monday in June and November of each year; and each of said terms at each of said places shall continue so long as the presiding judge may deem necessary.

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process in either of said courts shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change of time in the holding of the terms of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pending, and triable at the terms herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That the clerks of said circuit and district courts for the eastern district of Tennessee may reside and keep their offices, respectively, in either the city of Knoxville, Chattanooga, or Greeneville; but said clerks shall each, respectively, appoint a deputy to reside and keep their offices in each of the above-named cities other than the one in which said clerks shall respectively reside and keep their offices; that the said deputy clerks shall, in the absence of their principals, do and perform all the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from and after August 1, 1906, the public welfare requiring it; and that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

SOLDIERS' ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, COLUMBIA INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 18668) ratifying and confirming soldiers' additional homestead entries heretofore made and allowed upon land embraced in what was formerly the Columbia Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all entries under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for lands embraced in what was formerly the Columbia Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, heretofore made in good faith and accepted at the local land office of the land district in which said lands are situated, under and pursuant to the practice of the Department theretofore existing, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patents in all such cases in which patent has not already issued.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15442, to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and sundry other amendments, a copy of which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KELIHER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of what is known as the "naturalization bill," and pass the same with amendments agreed to by the Committee of the Whole House and with other amendments submitted by the gentleman from Colorado. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask for a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The bill will have to be read before a second is demanded or ordered, and if there be no objection the bill will be read by the Clerk with the amendments as it is proposed to have it passed.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The bill has to be read first.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's objection does not avail. The bill must be read, and what the Chair stated was that the bill as covered by the motion covers the original bill, the amendments agreed to by the Committee of the Whole House and the amendments offered in addition by the gentleman from Colorado. Now, the Chair said if there be no objection, instead of reading the bill in that shape it will be read as it would be with the amendments in.

Mr. COCKRAN. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The other day when we were discussing that bill the gentleman from Colorado in charge of it asked that section 15——

Mr. BONYNGE. Thirteen is what the gentleman refers to. That is stricken out under the amendments I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as covered by the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15442) to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the designation of the Bureau of Immigration in the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby changed to the "Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization," which said Bureau, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in addition to the duties now provided by law, shall have charge of all matters concerning the naturalization of aliens. That it shall be the duty of the said Bureau to provide, for use at the various immigration stations throughout the United States, books of record, wherein the commissioners of immigration shall cause a registry to be made in the case of each alien arriving in the United States from and after the passage of this act of the name, age, occupation, personal description (including height, complexion, color of hair and eyes), the place of birth, the last residence, the intended place of residence in the United States, and the date of arrival of said alien, and, if entered through a port, the name of the vessel in which he comes. And it shall be the duty of said commissioners of immigration to cause to be granted to such alien a certificate of such registry, with the particulars thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall provide the said Bureau with such additional furnished offices within the city of Washington, such books of record and facilities, and such additional assistants, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, and other employees as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the duties imposed by this act upon such Bureau, fixing the compensation of such additional employees, until July 1, 1907, within the appropriations made for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States is hereby conferred upon the following specified courts:

United States circuit and district courts now existing or which may hereafter be established by Congress in any State, United States district courts for the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Hawaii, and Alaska, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts for the Indian Territory; also all courts of record in any State or Territory now existing, or which may hereafter be created, having a seal, a clerk, and jurisdiction in actions at law or equity or law and equity in which the amount in controversy is unlimited.

That the naturalization jurisdiction of all courts herein specified, State, Territorial, and Federal, shall extend only to aliens resident within the respective judicial districts of such courts.

The courts herein specified shall, upon the requisition of the clerks of such courts, be furnished from time to time by the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization with such blank forms as may be required in the naturalization of aliens, and all certificates of naturalization shall be consecutively numbered and printed on safety paper furnished by said Bureau.

SEC. 4. That an alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner and not otherwise:

First. He shall declare on oath before the clerk of any court authorized by this act to naturalize aliens, or his authorized deputy, in the district in which such alien resides, two years at least prior to his admission, and after he has reached the age of 18 years, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly, by name, to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which the alien may be at the time a citizen or subject. And such declaration shall set forth the name, age, occupation, personal description, place of birth, last foreign residence and allegiance, the date of arrival, the name of the vessel, if any, in which he came to the United States, and the present place of residence in the United States of said alien: Provided, however, That no alien who, in conformity with the law in force at the date of his declaration, has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be required to renew such declaration.

Second. Not less than two years nor more than seven years after he has made such declaration of intention he shall make and file, in duplicate, a petition in writing, signed by the applicant in his own handwriting and duly verified, in which petition such applicant shall state his full name, his place of residence (by street and number, if possible), his occupation, and, if possible, the date and place of his birth; the place from which he emigrated, and the date and place of his arrival in the United States, and, if he entered through a port, the name of the vessel on which he arrived; the time when and the place and name of the court where he declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; if he is married he shall state the name of his wife and, if possible, the country of her nativity and her place of residence at the time of filing his petition; and if he has children, the name, date, and place of birth and place of residence of each child living at the time of the filing of his petition: Provided, That if he has filed his declaration before the passage of this act he shall not be required to sign the petition in his own handwriting.

The petition shall set forth that he is not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government, or a member of or affiliated with any organization or body of persons teaching disbelief in or opposed to organized government, a polygamist or believer in polygamy, and that it is his intention to become a citizen of the United States and to renounce absolutely and forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he at the time of filing of his petition may be a citizen or subject, and that it is his intention to reside permanently within the United States, and whether or not he has been denied admission as a citizen of the United States, and, if denied, the ground or grounds of such denial, the court or courts in which such decision was rendered, and that the cause for such denial has since been cured or removed, and every fact material to his naturalization and required to be proved upon the final hearing of his application.

The petition shall also be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, who are citizens of the United States, and who shall state in their affidavits that they have personally known the applicant to be a resident of the United States for a period of at least five years continuously, and of the State, Territory, or district in which the application is made for a period of at least one year immediately preceding the date of the filing of his petition, and that they each have personal knowledge that the petitioner is a person of good moral character, and that he is in every way qualified, in their opinion, to be admitted as a citizen of the United States.

At the time of filing his petition there shall be filed with the clerk of the court a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, if the petitioner arrives in the United States after the passage of this act, stating the date, place, and manner of his arrival in the United States, and the declaration of intention of such petitioner, which certificate and declaration shall be attached to and made a part of said petition.

Third. He shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounces and abjures all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject; that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

Fourth. It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States five years at least, and within the State or Territory where such court is at the time held one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. In addition to the oath of the applicant, the testimony of at least two witnesses, citizens of the United States, as to the facts of residence, moral character, and attachment to the principles of the Constitution shall be required, and the name, place of residence, and occupation of each witness shall be set forth in the record.

Fifth. In case the alien applying to be admitted to citizenship has borne any hereditary title, or has been of any of the orders of nobility in the kingdom or state from which he came, he shall, in addition to the above requisites, make an express renunciation of his title or order of nobility in the court to which his application is made, and his renunciation shall be recorded in the court.

Sixth. When any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention.

SEC. 5. That the clerk of the court shall, immediately after filing the petition, give notice thereof by posting in a public and conspicuous place in his office, or in the building in which his office is situated, under an appropriate heading, the name, nativity, and residence of the alien, the date and place of his arrival in the United States, and the date, as nearly as may be, for the final hearing of his petition, and the names of the witnesses whom the applicant expects to summon in his behalf; and the clerk shall, if the applicant requests it, issue a subpœna for the witnesses so named by the said applicant to appear upon the day set for the final hearing, but in case such witnesses can not be produced upon the final hearing other witnesses may be summoned.

SEC. 6. That petitions for naturalization may be made and filed during term time or vacation of the court and shall be docketed the same day as filed, but final action thereon shall be had only on stated days, to be fixed by rule of the court, and in no case shall final action be had upon a petition until at least ninety days have elapsed after filing and posting the notice of such petition: Provided, That no person shall be naturalized nor shall any certificate of naturalization be issued by any court within thirty days preceding the holding of any general election within its territorial jurisdiction. It shall be lawful, at the time and as a part of the naturalization of any alien, for the court, in its discretion, upon petition of such alien, to make a decree changing the name of said alien, and his certificate of naturalization shall be issued to him in accordance therewith.

SEC. 7. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States, or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who is a polygamist, shall be naturalized or be made a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 8. That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not speak the English language: Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise qualified to become citizens of the United States: And provided further, That the requirements of this section shall not apply to any alien who has prior to the passage of this act declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in conformity with the law in force at the date of making such declaration: Provided further, That the requirement of section 8 shall not apply to aliens who shall hereafter declare their intention to become citizens and who shall make homestead entries upon the public lands of the United States and comply in all respects with the laws providing for homestead entries on such lands.

SEC. 9. That every final hearing upon such petition shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose, and upon such final hearing of such petition the applicant and witnesses shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court.

SEC. 10. That in case the petitioner has not resided in the State, Territory, or district for a period of five years continuously and immediately preceding the filing of his petition he may establish by two witnesses, both in his petition and at the hearing, the time of his residence within the State, provided that it has been for more than one year, and the remaining portion of his five years' residence within the United States required by law to be established may be proved by the depositions of two or more witnesses who are citizens of the United States, upon notice to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and the United States attorney for the district in which said witnesses may reside.

SEC. 11. That the United States shall have the right to appear before any court or courts exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings for the purpose of cross-examining the petitioner and the witnesses produced in support of his petition concerning any matter touching or in any way affecting his right to admission to citizenship, and shall have the right to call witnesses, produce evidence, and be heard in opposition to the granting of any petition in naturalization proceedings.

SEC. 12. That it is hereby made the duty of the clerk of each and every court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization matters under the provisions of this act to keep and file a duplicate of each declaration of intention made before him and to send to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization at Washington, within thirty days after the issuance of a certificate of citizenship, a duplicate of such certificate, and to make and keep on file in his office a stub for each certificate so issued by him, whereon shall be entered a memorandum of all the essential facts set forth in such certificate. It shall also be the duty of the clerk of each of said courts to report to the said Bureau, within thirty days after the final hearing and decision of the court, the name of each and every alien who shall be denied naturalization, and to furnish to said Bureau duplicates of all petitions within thirty days after the filing of the same, and certified copies of such other proceedings and orders instituted in or issued out of said court affecting or relating to the naturalization of aliens as may be required from time to time by the said Bureau.

In case any such clerk or officer acting under his direction shall refuse or neglect to comply with any of the foregoing provisions he shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $25 in each and every case in which such violation or omission occurs, and the amount of such forfeiture may be recovered by the United States in an action of debt against such clerk.

Clerks of courts having and exercising jurisdiction in naturalization matters shall be responsible for all blank certificates of citizenship received by them from time to time from the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and shall account for the same to the said Bureau whenever required so to do by such Bureau. No certificate of citizenship received by any such clerk which may be defaced or injured in such manner as to prevent its use as herein provided shall in any case be destroyed, but such certificate shall be returned to the said Bureau; and in case any such clerk shall fail to return or properly account for any certificate furnished by the said Bureau, as herein provided, he shall be liable to the United States in the sum of $50, to be recovered in an action of debt, for each and every certificate not properly accounted for or returned.

SEC. 13. That the clerk of each and every court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization cases shall charge, collect, and account for the following fees in each proceeding:

For receiving and filing a declaration of intention and issuing a duplicate thereof, $1.

For making, filing, and docketing the petition of an alien for admission as a citizen of the United States and for the final hearing thereon, $2; and for entering the final order and the issuance of the certificate of citizenship thereunder, if granted, $2.

The clerk of any court collecting such fees is hereby authorized to retain one-half of the fees collected by him in such naturalization proceeding; the remaining one-half of the naturalization fees in each case collected by such clerks, respectively, shall be accounted for in their quarterly accounts, which they are hereby required to render the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and paid over to such Bureau within thirty days from the close of each quarter in each and every fiscal year, and the moneys so received shall be paid over to the disbursing clerk of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who shall thereupon deposit them in the Treasury of the United States, rendering an account therefor quarterly to the Auditor for the State and other Departments, and the said disbursing clerk shall be held responsible under his bond for said fees so received.

In addition to the fees herein required, the petitioner shall, upon the filing of his petition to become a citizen of the United States, deposit with and pay to the clerk of the court a sum of money sufficient to cover the expenses of subpœnaing and paying the legal fees of any witnesses for whom he may request a subpœna, and upon the final discharge of such witnesses they shall receive, if they demand the same from the clerk, the customary and usual witness fees from the moneys which the petitioner shall have paid to such clerk for such purpose, and the residue, if any, shall be returned by the clerk to the petitioner: Provided, That the clerks of courts exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings shall be permitted to retain one-half of the fees in any fiscal year up to the sum of $3,000, and that all fees received by such clerks in naturalization proceedings in excess of such amount shall be accounted for and paid over to said Bureau as in case of other fees to which the United States may be entitled under the provisions of this act. The clerks of the various courts exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings shall pay all additional clerical force that may be required in performing the duties imposed by this act upon the clerks of courts from fees received by such clerks in naturalization proceedings. And in case the clerk of any court collects fees in excess of the sum of $6,000 in any one year, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may allow to such clerk from the money which the United States shall receive additional compensation for the employment of additional clerical assistance, but for no other purpose, if, in the opinion of the said Secretary, the business of such clerk warrants such allowance.

SEC. 14. That the declarations of intention and the petitions for naturalization shall be bound in chronological order in separate volumes, indexed, consecutively numbered, and made part of the records of the court. Each certificate of naturalization issued shall bear upon its face, in a place prepared therefor, the volume number and page number of the petition whereon such certificate was issued and the volume number and page number of the stub of such certificate.

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing the suit, for the purpose of setting aside and canceling the certificate of citizenship on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such certificate of citizenship was illegally procured. In any such proceedings the party holding the certificate of citizenship alleged to have been fraudulently or illegally procured shall have sixty days personal notice in which to make answer to the petition of the United States; and if the holder of such certificate be absent from the United States or from the district in which he last had his residence, such notice shall be given by publication in the manner provided for the service of summons by publication or upon absentees by the laws of the State or the place where such suit is brought.

If any alien who shall have secured a certificate of citizenship under the provisions of this act shall, within five years after the issuance of such certificate, return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such alien to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing his application for citizenship, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancellation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent, and the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States in foreign countries shall from time to time, through the Department of State, furnish the Department of Justice with the names of those within their respective jurisdictions who have such certificates of citizenship and who have taken permanent residence in the country of their nativity or in any other foreign country, and such statements, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence in all courts in proceedings to cancel certificates of citizenship.

Whenever any certificate of citizenship shall be set aside or canceled, as herein provided, the court in which such judgment or decree is rendered shall make an order canceling such certificate of citizenship and shall send a certified copy of such order to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; and in case such certificate was not originally issued by the court making such order it shall direct the clerk of the court to transmit a copy of such order and judgment to the court out of which such certificate of citizenship shall have been originally issued. And it shall thereupon be the duty of the clerk of the court receiving such certified copy of the order and judgment of the court to enter the same of record and to cancel such original certificate of citizenship upon the records and to notify the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization of such cancellation.

The provisions of this section shall apply not only to certificates of citizenship issued under the provisions of this act, but to all certificates of citizenship which may have been issued heretofore by any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings under prior laws.

SEC. 16. That every person who falsely makes, forges, counterfeits, or causes or procures to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or knowingly aids or assists in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any certificate of citizenship, with intent to use the same, or with the intent that the same may be used by some other person or persons, shall be guilty of a felony, and a person convicted of such offense shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than ten years, or by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 17. That every person who engraves or causes or procures to be engraved, or assists in engraving, any plate in the likeness of any plate designed for the printing of a certificate of citizenship, or who sells any such plate, or who brings into the United States from any foreign place any such plate, except under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or other proper officer, and any person who has in his control, custody, or possession any metallic plate engraved after the similitude of any plate from which any such certificate has been printed, with intent to use such plate or suffer the same to be used in forging or counterfeiting any such certificate or any part thereof; and every person who prints, photographs, or in any other manner causes to be printed, photographed, made, or executed, any print or impression in the likeness of any such certificate, or any part thereof, or who sells any such certificate, or brings the same into the United States from any foreign place, except by direction of some proper officer of the United States, or who has in his possession a distinctive paper which has been adopted by the proper officer of the United States for the printing of such certificate, with intent to unlawfully use the same, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than ten years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 18. That it is hereby made a felony for any clerk or other person to issue or be a party to the issuance of a certificate of citizenship contrary to the provisions of this act, except upon a final order under the hand of a court having jurisdiction to make such order, and upon conviction thereof such clerk or other person shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than five years and by a fine of not more than $5,000, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 19. That every person who without lawful excuse is possessed of any blank certificate of citizenship provided by the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, with intent unlawfully to use the same, shall be imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years or be fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 20. That any clerk or other officer of a court having power under this act to naturalize aliens who willfully neglects to render true accounts of moneys received by him for naturalization proceedings or who willfully neglects to pay over any balance of such moneys due to the United States within thirty days after said payment shall become due and demand therefor has been made and refused, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement of the public moneys, and shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or both.

SEC. 21. That it shall be unlawful for any clerk of any court or his authorized deputy or assistant exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings, or any other person, to demand, charge, collect, or receive any other or additional fees or moneys in naturalization proceedings save the fees and moneys herein specified; and a violation of any of the provisions of this section or any part thereof is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 22. That the clerk of any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings, or any person acting under authority of this act, who shall knowingly certify that a petitioner, affiant, or witness named in an affidavit, petition, or certificate of citizenship, or other paper or writing required to be executed under the provisions of this act, personally appeared before him and was sworn thereto, or acknowledged the execution thereof or signed the same, when in fact such petitioner, affiant, or witness did not personally appear before him, or was not sworn thereto, or did not execute the same, or did not acknowledge the execution thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not to exceed five years.

SEC. 23. That any person who knowingly procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this act shall be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and upon conviction the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the final order admitting such person to citizenship void. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication. Any person who knowingly aids, advises, or encourages any person not entitled thereto to apply for or to secure naturalization, or to file the preliminary papers declaring an intent to become a citizen of the United States, or who in any naturalization proceeding knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, or who knowingly makes an affidavit false as to any material fact required to be proved in such proceeding, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 24. That no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime.

SEC. 25. That for the purpose of the prosecution of all crimes and offenses against the naturalization laws of the United States which may have been committed prior to the date when this act shall go into effect the existing naturalization laws shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 28. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for properly carrying into execution the various provisions of this act. Certified copy of all papers, documents, certificates, and records required to be used, filed, recorded, or kept under any and all of the provisions of this act shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals in any and all proceedings under this act and in all cases in which the originals thereof might be inadmissible as evidence.

SEC. 29. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000 out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, which appropriation shall be in full for the objects hereby expressed until June 30, 1907; and the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

SEC. 30. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after ninety days from the date of its passage: Provided, That sections 1, 2, 28, and 29 shall go into effect from and after the passage of this act.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment to section 17, which I sent to the Clerk's desk, the Clerk has omitted to read. In the first two lines, "that it shall be the duty, etc."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk seems to have mislaid the amendment. Can the gentleman reproduce it?

Mr. BONYNGE. I will reproduce it if the Clerk will omit reading that section for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to say without objection the Clerk will conclude the reading of the bill and then recur to the amendment, which seems to have been mislaid.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to the fact that as a matter of order, under the rule adopted last night, two hours of this day's session were to be occupied by this order of business, and it seems to me that the two hours are very nearly exhausted, if not entirely so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would hardly interrupt the reading of a bill for the purpose of making that point, although the Chair is clearly of opinion this is in the nature of unfinished business and being commenced prior to the expiration of the two hours, and the legislative day continuing, would have to be completed.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the Chair mean that more than two hours can be devoted to this work under this order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that a matter which is pending at the expiration of the two hours—is inclined to that opinion and is pretty clearly of that opinion—that at the expiration of the two hours, under the rule, this would be considered as continuing, with twenty minutes debate if a second should be ordered, until a vote was taken.

Mr. COCKRAN. For the purpose of bringing that matter clearly before the Chair, I make the point of order now.

The SPEAKER. It is hardly apt to make the point of order; but by unanimous consent the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. COCKRAN. If it requires unanimous consent to have the point overruled, one Member present would refuse.

The SPEAKER. It takes unanimous consent, the Chair supposes, to interrupt the reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRAN. I suppose I could rise to a question of order at any time. It is not necessary to ask unanimous consent to make the point of order that under the order of business the time allotted has expired.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will finish reading, and then the gentleman will have his opportunity to make his point.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COCKRAN. First, Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the regular order is not the further continuance of this business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state: Reading from the RECORD:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the House is about to adjourn, and I ask unanimous consent that for two hours to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to make motions to suspend the rules and pass bills the same as in order to-day.

The gentleman will notice that it is not that it shall be in order to make a motion to consider for two hours, but to make motions the same as to-day. Now, under the construction of the order made by unanimous consent, it seems to the Chair the usual construction would be the motion might be made within the two hours, and it would remain in the nature of unfinished business; but it would not be in order to recognize anybody or at any time after 2 o'clock to move to suspend the rules. Recognition having been given, and the motion made prior to 2 o'clock, in the opinion of the Chair the point of order is not well taken, and is therefore overruled.

Mr. COCKRAN. Would the Chair entertain an appeal from that decision? It is rather a serious precedent, and I think the House ought to be called to pass upon that. It is a precedent that may have very extended application.

The SPEAKER. One moment. While that is the construction of the Chair, and it has passed upon it, yet the Chair, even if he had the power, has no disposition to make a ruling that would prevent the House from coming to a conclusion as to the construction of the order. Does the gentleman desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; I should like to take the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. From which decision, overruling the point of order, the gentleman from New York appeals?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 155, noes 37.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COCKRAN. I demand a second.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. COCKRAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from New York will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 17.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. COCKRAN. I withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported to the House by the gentleman did not provide that a certified copy of the original naturalization papers should take the place of the original papers, and the chairman of the committee thought that that was provided for by an amendment. I would like to have that amendment read.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.

Mr. TALBOTT. I would like to have that amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendment can be reported by unanimous consent.

Mr. TALBOTT. Well, then, I ask unanimous consent, because it is very important.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 9, part of section 28: "Certified copies of all papers, documents, certificates, and records required to be used, filed, recorded, or kept under any or all of the provisions of this act shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals in any and all proceedings under this act, and in all cases in which the originals thereof might be admissible as evidence."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, this motion is to pass the bill H. R. 15442, with all the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole during its consideration by the committee and with certain other amendments which I have had read from the Clerk's desk during the reading of the bill.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Speaker, in the confusion that attended the reading of this portion of the bill, it was not quite clear to me whether an amendment which I offered reducing the aggregate naturalization fee from $11, as originally reported, to $5 was included or not. It was agreed that my amendment was to be accepted. I desire to ask now if that amendment is incorporated in the bill?

Mr. BONYNGE. That amendment is incorporated in the bill, so that the total fee for naturalization under this bill, if it passes, will be $5.

Mr. KEIFER. While the gentleman is answering questions, I simply want the House to understand what became of section 13—the one that undertook to make provision for an appeal?

Mr. BONYNGE. That was stricken out altogether in the bill, as reported from the Clerk's desk. It does not contain that section at all.

Mr. KEIFER. It contains no provision for an appeal?

Mr. BONYNGE. It does not. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I only want the amendment which I called the gentleman's attention to, and which the gentleman says he has inserted in the bill, to do what I think ought to be done, and that is to make a copy of the certificate of naturalization in case the original is lost, take the place of the original for the purpose of registration and voting. I do not believe that is accomplished by the gentleman's amendment. The idea of naturalization is for two purposes: One is to be able to own property in fee, and the other is to exercise the right of the franchise.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk provides that certified copies of all papers, documents, certificates, and records which are required to be kept or used or filed or recorded can be used and admitted in evidence in any and all proceedings under this bill with the same force and effect equally as the originals, and in all cases where the originals could be used the certified copies may be used with the same force as the originals.

Mr. TALBOTT. If you style the right to register and vote under this act a "proceeding," that might cover it, but I do not believe it does.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think that proposition is fully covered, and it is also covered by the general statutes.

Mr. TALBOTT. The general statute does not cover it.

Mr. KELIHER. Under the provisions of this revised bill, what will be the charge to an applicant who has filed his declaration of intention prior to the passage of this law and who wishes to get his final papers?

Mr. BONYNGE. Four dollars.

Mr. KELIHER. Will he be charged the fees fixed by the new bill or the fee in operation when he filed his declaration?

Mr. BONYNGE. He will be charged $4, two when he files his application and two when he gets the certificate.

Mr. KELIHER. I should like to ask the gentleman further if he thinks it is fair to an applicant who has already filed his declaration under the old law, which required him to pay a certain fee, to compel him when he gets his final papers to pay a fee which has been greatly increased since he filed his declaration?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not think that is a hardship on him any more than it is on those who shall come in later. I think it is well worth the $4 he will have to pay. It is very cheap at that price. I think everybody who appreciates American citizenship will willingly pay the price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in Committee of the Whole all the essential features of this bill were fully discussed, while the bill was open to amendment, excepting two provisions. One is the provision in reference to fees, which we have reduced to $5, and which I think will meet with the unanimous approval of the members of the committee.

The other essential feature of the bill which was not discussed in Committee of the Whole was that which provides for the cancellation of certificates fraudulently obtained. With the exception of those two provisions, the rest of the bill deals simply with naturalization frauds, prescribing punishment for frauds and crimes that may be committed in naturalization proceedings and providing forms to be used in such proceedings.

In the amendments that we have sent to the Clerk's desk was also included an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] which provides that if an alien, after receiving a certificate of naturalization, goes to his former country within five years and remains there permanently, taking up a permanent residence, it shall be construed as prima facie evidence that he did not intend to reside permanently in the United States at the time he made his application, and then it provides for proceedings for the cancellation of a certificate obtained under such circumstances.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman suggested any amendment to section 17, providing for the cancellation of certificates?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; in section 17, as it was originally reported, it was provided that the United States should, upon affidavit made by any credible person, have the power to institute proceedings, either in the court out of which the certificate might have issued, or in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside.

That portion has been changed so that it reads:

That it shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys in the respective districts, upon an affidavit showing good cause therefor, made by any credible person, to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside, and takes away the right to institute it in the court out of which the certificate of citizenship may have been issued, unless the alien happens to reside within the jurisdiction of that court. In other words, the proceedings must be brought in a court having power to issue certificates of naturalization in the district in which the person resides whose certificate is sought to be canceled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The original section provided that this proceeding might be brought for fraud or for illegality in the issuance of the certificate.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are those two clauses retained?

Mr. BONYNGE. They remain, and under existing law it can be done now, as decided by the Federal courts.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. After the naturalization has been perfected in this country, how long a residence abroad does it require before it is concluded to be indicative that the naturalized person does not longer desire to be a citizen?

Mr. BONYNGE. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who prepared that amendment, to answer that question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the question?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What residence abroad, after naturalization, is permitted in this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Whenever an alien secures naturalization under this law, and within five years after leaves for a foreign country and becomes a permanent resident there——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What constitutes permanent residence?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a question of law. If he takes up a permanent home, with the intention of remaining there permanently and not returning to the United States——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to fix the time that he may be permitted to remain in that country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; because many people will remain there indefinitely on business or for health, or for one purpose or another, and yet have no intention of giving up their home here; but if an alien comes here and remains only long enough to secure naturalization, and then takes his certificate and secures a passport and returns to the country of his origin or to another foreign country, and takes up a permanent domicil there, with no intention of returning to the United States, practically expatriating himself, that ought to be prima facie evidence.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does not the gentleman consider that those men who go abroad and engage in business and stay there have a permanent residence there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; not necessarily.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Why not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends on circumstances. If it is an American, he may be there for the purpose of engaging in business.

Mr. BONYNGE. An American citizen, either naturalized or native.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Either naturalized or native.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I am speaking of the naturalized ones only.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Residence is largely a question of intention, and it can not be defined in any bill. It is, as I say, largely a question of intent.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. How can a permanent residence ever be determined?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Take, for instance, our consular or diplomatic representatives in foreign countries. When a native of Turkey stays here long enough to get citizenship and a passport, goes back to Turkey and identifies himself with Turkish civilization, erects a home and goes into business, and leaves nothing here to come back to, that would be good evidence of a permanent citizenship abroad.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I think it ought to be limited.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the gentleman, the amendment which I suggested to him in regard to the court in which the petition could be filed for the purpose of cancellation of the certificate has been accepted by the committee, and an amendment offered limiting it to the court in the district in which the person at the time resides.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has any amendment been offered cutting out the provision for constructive notice?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; the gentleman made the suggestion and thought there was some question in regard to the legality of the provision as reported in the bill. My opinion is, after such investigation as I have been able to give the subject, that the provision is constitutional and legal.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, in my State the right of an alien to hold property is greatly restricted. Under your provision canceling a man's citizenship you may upset land titles in a good many States in the Union, and I doubt the wisdom of doing it on constructive notice. I offer that as a suggestion for the gentleman's consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. In the rapidity of the reading, my attention being distracted, I did not catch fully the reading of the bill. I want to know whether any change has been made in regard to the jurisdiction of the courts or whether or not they remain giving the jurisdiction to courts in which there is a limited jurisdiction.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; we adopted the amendment approved by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McNARY. Just what is that?

Mr. BONYNGE. It leaves it as it is to courts having unlimited jurisdiction in actions at law or equity or actions at law and equity.

Mr. McNARY. The only objection I have to the bill is that.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House a moment to an amendment that ought to be added to this bill, and I will ask the Clerk to read it in my time. Perhaps when the House understands it they will give unanimous consent to its insertion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by inserting at the end of section 8 as amended the following:

"Provided further, That the requirements of section 8 shall not apply to aliens who shall hereafter declare their intention to become citizens and who shall make homestead entries upon the public lands of the United States and comply in all respects with the laws providing for homestead entries on such lands."

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the House for a moment. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be considered as included in the bill, and I will explain the reason for it. An alien now has to file his declaration of intention before he takes a homestead. A Scandinavian that goes out into the backwoods of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and files his declaration for a homestead must prove up within seven years or forfeit his rights. He sees nobody but his wife and children, and he does not hear any language spoken except Scandinavian. He is worth a thousand of the men that can speak forty languages and write in forty languages who live in the slums. He has had no opportunity to learn the English language, but he has made the best proof of his worthiness of citizenship by taking a homestead and building and living upon it for seven years. Now, unless he has learned to speak the language by that time he can not prove up; consequently he loses his home. Now, that is not the object of this bill. I thought it was my duty to call attention of the Members to the provision of the land laws, and I do not think it was the intention of this committee or the intention of the House to cut these men out. I ask unanimous consent that it be included.

Mr. BONYNGE. I have no objection. It is a good amendment, and I shall be glad to see it incorporated in the bill. It meets with my full approval. We want to help such people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRAN. Do I understand that the amendment is accepted?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am glad the chairman of the committee has made that concession. It is certainly a valuable amendment. At every stage of its consideration in committee this bill was improved so largely and decisively that my main object in opposing this unusual haste is a belief that with two days more to work on it we might have made it into a perfect measure. Mr. Speaker, my principal objection is to section 9; but I consider the whole bill objectionable, because no necessity for it has ever been shown, and any proposal of law for which there is no obvious necessity is, in my judgment, a vicious proposal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will point out what I think to be an existing fact—that to-day there are thousands of men holding naturalization certificates and claiming to be citizens of the United States residing in Jerusalem and Palestine who have no intention of coming back whatever. They came here and got a certificate, and then went back to their land and went into business there. Now, this bill will prevent that.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, assuming that to be true, I still think the bill is absolutely unnecessary, and therefore vicious. Worse, much worse than the man who asks for naturalization and obtains it as a shield and panoply abroad, is he who born to American citizenship forfeits it, renounces it deliberately while still enjoying the protection of our laws for vast possessions inside our boundaries, and who while enjoying such protection despises privileges and evades obligations which are rightfully his. Not a line of this measure touches that man, the protection of whose property is an actual burden to us, while it changes our whole system of naturalization in order to reach a few men who have neither burdened nor harmed us.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it was originally reported, embraced provisions which have been eliminated in Committee of the Whole, and they were the most objectionable. In addition to reading and writing his own language, it required that the immigrant be able to read and speak the English tongue. As the vast majority of immigrants are ignorant of English, this meant that in almost every instance the applicant for naturalization must be master of two languages. That provision was changed in committee, so that no qualification is now imposed except ability to speak English. That was a great improvement, but even the requirement that remains is objectionable. It was justified on the ground that every person who lived here for five years would inevitably acquire a knowledge of the English language anyway, and that the provision was therefore of little significance. It was left in the bill, I suppose—to use a colloquialism—to save the face of the Committee on Naturalization.

Now, I learn from gentlemen around me here that in many parts of this country there are vast numbers of men, excellent laborers, excellent producers, excellent inhabitants, peaceful, orderly, highly intelligent, but who can not speak the English language and who are not likely to be able to acquire it. Gentlemen opposite seem to assume that it is a very easy thing to acquire a language. I would like to know how a man compelled to work all day in association with men born in the same country, under the direction of a foreman who speaks his tongue, can enjoy an opportunity of acquiring a new language? How many of us here who have served four years with even the amount of work imposed upon us by our Congressional duties have found time to acquire a new language? Since aliens who do not speak English will continue to be admitted at our ports, the net result of this bill as it stands will be that a large number of persons will be added every year to our population who must remain excluded forever from citizenship.

I consider such a deliberate creation of a large alien class in the heart of our population a vicious departure from the liberal and distinctively American policy of a century which up to the present has been fruitful of nothing but benefit. When we ask why this radical change is attempted the gentleman gives as the only reason the possible existence of some men in Jerusalem who claim American citizenship and yet who do not live in America. Well, even if that be true, it is not a very serious injury to us. I do not know that those men living in Jerusalem have ever raised any particular complication which the United States Government has been called upon to meet, and I do know that to provide for a constantly swelling addition to our population of persons who can not be admitted to citizenship is a positive and serious danger.

Now, I would ask any gentleman here, What harm can come from the admission to citizenship of a man who has shown by five years' residence in the country that he can support himself by his own labor? I am perfectly willing to withdraw opposition to this bill—I would be the first to encourage its passage—if, instead of imposing a ridiculous linguistic qualification, it provided that no man could be naturalized who did not prove conclusively that for five years he had supported himself by honest productive industry, and that he was capable of continuing to earn his bread by his own toil. Propose an industrial qualification and no man on this floor will object to it. The country will then be entirely secure from undesirable additions to its citizenship, for it is hardly conceivable that a man who has actually lived by work for five years would be likely to seek a livelihood by less creditable means.

I think it infinitely better for the country that every recruit to citizenship should be able to work in one language than that he be able to speak in a dozen. [Applause.] Ability to speak any tongue is no proof of the qualifications really essential to useful citizenship. A man may have a capacity for speaking ten languages and yet be good for nothing except to swell the volume of our political disputations. He can't exercise two hands in labor without enriching the whole community. Mr. Speaker, I submit to this House that we have in this country abundance of linguistic ability. If we lack anything, it is a supply of labor. This bill, so far as it may have any effect, will operate to exclude laborers from our citizenship, and if you do that you furnish a strong argument for shutting them out of your population. This, sir, I should deplore as a grave calamity, for I consider that stream of labor flowing through our ports every year the most fruitful and reliable fountain of all our prosperity.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York—beginning at section 5 it says "that an alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner and not otherwise," and at the end of the bill is a clause which repeals all acts inconsistent with the foregoing act. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not that does not repeal section 2172 of the Revised Statutes, which provides——

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I can not undertake to answer the gentleman. The gentleman must know my objection to legal disquisitions in a legislative body. Moreover, I have not the statute before me. I can not stop now to examine it, and I certainly do not want to speak of it before examination.

Mr. STEENERSON. I was going to suggest——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. I merely desire to add, Mr. Speaker, in closing, that before the establishment of this Republic there never was a democratic system able to maintain itself in vigor without a large number of inhabitants occupying a status inferior to that of citizen. Even here, sir, absolute equality of rights is of recent establishment. We have established equality, and we are maintaining it triumphantly; but how have we succeeded in doing it? Because these immigrants, hastening here in such numbers, have been to us what the Helots were to ancient Sparta. The Helots of old won admission to Spartan citizenship by service in the field of battle. These immigrants for the last sixty years have been winning for themselves and their children admission to our citizenship by service in the field of industry.

The effect of this bill will be to substitute for service in the field of industry, as the condition of naturalization, knowledge of a language, a mere facility or glibness of speech, which is not necessarily proof of merit in its possessor and of no possible advantage to the community of which he is a part. I ask this House not to change our system of naturalization from the foundations on which it has rested securely—gloriously—for the past century. For a hundred years we have prospered beyond all experience or parallel. No damage has ever come to us through the liberality of our naturalization laws. Gentlemen eager to suggest a danger have been compelled to locate it in Jerusalem. I can assure them the effect of this legislation will be to establish a real peril closer home.

If we must choose between dangers, those on the other side of the globe are certainly the least formidable. Do not let us seek to remove them by sacrificing or overthrowing conditions under which our own prosperity has been enormous, while at the same time we have improved decisively the conditions of men all over the world. For one hundred years the prospect of admission to this citizenship has been the mainspring of progress everywhere. It has been a light and inspiration to every ambitious youth wherever in Christendom he may have been born. It has encouraged him to improve the productive power of his hands that when they were trained to efficiency they might be employed here to increase his earnings and at the same time win for him the dignity of American citizenship.

Under its influence Europe has been to us a nursery where laborers essential to the cultivation of our soil have been reared and developed without any expense or trouble to ourselves. While they were of tender years, helpless, of no productive power, these men have been nurtured and supported that when they reached years of vigor and efficiency they might come here and produce each one much more than he consumed, the difference between his own wages and the value of his product being the amount of his contribution to the wealth of the country. Every man who came here through all these years and engaged in productive labor has been therefore a fountain of abundance. The gentleman from Colorado now seeks to discourage this beneficent tide by making naturalization difficult, if not impossible, to many—the vast majority—of those men who, by the very act of coming here, prove their attachment to our institutions, their love of our soil, their eagerness to bear the burdens as well as to acquire the privileges of citizenship.

I protest, Mr. Speaker, against a senseless change in this beneficent system of naturalization which has wrought such great benefit to this country and has shed such a brilliant light of encouragement before the footsteps of men throughout the world. Though no one else should oppose it, I, at least, shall ask to be counted against this bill while that provision remains a feature of it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BONYNGE. How much time is there left to the other side?

The SPEAKER. There is four minutes remaining.

Mr. BONYNGE. I desire to conclude in one speech, and I suggest that the gentleman use the four minutes now.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not care to add anything, and nobody else asked for time.

Mr. PUJO rose.

Mr. COCKRAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read an amendment for the consideration of the chairman of the committee and likewise of the House, with the hope that it may be accepted.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PUJO moves to amend section 17, page 16, by striking out, in lines 22, 23, and 24, the words "by publication" and inserting in line 24 in lieu of the words "by publication" the words "on absentees."

Mr. PUJO. This paragraph in section 17, Mr. Speaker—I beg the attention of the chairman of the committee—if amended as suggested will read:

And if the holder of such certificate be absent from the United States, or from the district in which he last had his residence, such notice shall be given in the manner provided for the service of summons on absentees by the laws of the State or the place where such suit is brought.

Now, I will state that the reason for offering this amendment is that this section provides a different method of citation to an absentee than is authorized by law in some of the States. To illustrate, suppose a suit were instituted against an absentee by the Government of the United States to cancel his certificate of naturalization praying for judgment in that behalf. The suit would be of great importance at least to the party in interest. Now, under the provisions of this measure, notice would be by publication in one of the newspapers of the State. No such method of citation would be recognized under the laws of Louisiana.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the process in Louisiana?

Mr. PUJO. The process is this: An attorney to represent the absentee must be appointed by the court, and all process of court shall be served on him. It is made the duty of such curator ad hoc, or the attorney for the absentee, to correspond with the absent defendant and to advise him of the pendency of the action, so that he may instruct the attorney appointed to represent him or select counsel of his choice to resist the suit which has been brought against him. Now, the amendment which I have offered perfects the bill, and I again invite the attention of the House, and likewise the attention of the chairman of the committee, to this fact.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think we can cover the amendment and meet the conditions suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. PUJO. If the result is accomplished, I am willing to accept the gentleman's suggestion, but I think the amendment which I have suggested would cover the case perfectly. Under my amendment, in the States where publication is required, publication will be had, and in States where citation must be served upon a curator ad hoc, or counsel for the absentee, it will thus be authorized.

Mr. BONYNGE. It will be covered by inserting, after the word "publication," in line 24, the words "or upon absentees." I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill, with the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], by unanimous consent, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, which latter amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "publication," in line 24, the words "or upon absentees."

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that that amendment may be covered by the motion?

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

BURIAL GROUND OF ANDREW JOHNSON.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the acceptance of the burial ground of Andrew Johnson as a national cemetery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the bill to authorize the Secretary of War to accept, free of cost to the Government, the tract of 10 acres of land known as "Monument Hill," on the outskirts of Greeneville, Tenn., where the remains of Andrew Johnson now lie, I am but asking that a deserving though slight recognition of the services rendered his country by this distinguished statesman shall be made, a recognition which will be gratifying to millions of his countrymen, and should be objected to by no one.

Thirty-one years ago on the 31st of next July, at the residence of his daughter, near his own mountain home in East Tennessee, Andrew Johnson passed from this earth to receive his just reward. The event was an unwelcome one to the people of Tennessee, who had honored him with positions of trust since he was a young man 23 years of age, and who had but six months before elected him to the United States Senate; and it was a loss to the people of the nation, whose highest office he had so ably filled with incorruptible integrity. The career of Mr. Johnson is one of the most romantic and marvelous of that of any statesman of our political history, with the exception perhaps of Franklin and Lincoln. Like them, he was of the plain people. He rose from the depths of poverty and obscurity to the highest office within the gift of the people, and he served them well.

He was born at Raleigh, N. C., on the 29th of December, 1808. His father, Jacob Johnson, was a day laborer with a large family to provide for, yet he sacrificed his own life to save that of a stranger. When Andrew Johnson was but 4 years of age a traveler by the name of Henderson attempted to cross on horseback a swiftly moving river near the Johnson home, but he misjudged the ford and would have drowned had not assistance been rendered him. Seeing the danger to which the traveler was exposed, young Johnson's father repressed all thought of self and family and rushed to the rescue of the traveler and saved his life, but in so doing he contracted pneumonia and died. Thus, in boyhood's early days, Andrew Johnson was forced by an unfortunate yet noble circumstance to earn his own living and help provide for the family, which he did for a time by picking cotton. He was later apprenticed to a tailor. His mother, with but little of this world's goods, was left with a number of small children, and though unable to read or write, she managed to care for the little ones. Mrs. Johnson was a woman of superior native ability and industry, and it was from her Andrew inherited the talents which later made him familiar among the great men of the country, and she had the good fortune to live to see her son elected a Member of the National Congress.

In 1826, a poor and striving tailor of 18, Andrew Johnson left his cabin home in Raleigh, N. C., and with his devoted mother and stepfather and their scanty belongings in a two-wheel cart, drawn by a horse which had been purchased with the proceeds of the sale of the only respectable suit of clothes which the young man possessed, crossed the mountains westward, bound for Indiana, where the Lincolns had moved from Kentucky in 1816. The Johnsons halted at Greeneville, Tenn. The only tailor in the town having died a few days before, young Andrew concluded to remain. It may be possible if the life of that unknown village tailor had been longer, the political history of our country might have been different. "On what a slender thread hang everlasting things." It was at Greeneville that young Johnson, when 19 years of age, met and married Eliza McCardle, a beautiful, modest, and bright girl. They were married by Mordecai Lincoln, a justice of the peace and a cousin of Abraham Lincoln.

At the risk of being regarded as tedious, I will speak of the striking traits of character of this remarkable man, who, rising from abject poverty, became the running mate of the greatest of all our presidents except Washington and Jackson. While working as a tailor's apprentice young Johnson, who was never at school a day in his life, taught himself to read. He was taught to write by the angel who had taken her place at his side to share his sorrows and joys. He toiled laboriously for her support, but she more than repaid him by preparing him to stand forth in the strength of a stalwart manhood and to discharge the most responsible duties of an American citizen. He was not the creature of accident, as some of our Presidents have been, but a self-reliant, manly man of great native ability, Jacksonian will, and untiring industry, who rose from a village alderman to mayor, representative in both branches of the legislature of his adopted State, to be governor thereof, and then, after distinguished services in both Houses of Congress, to be Vice-President and President of the United States. After six years of private life following the expiration of his Presidential service, he was elected for the second time to the United States Senate. He was the only ex-President who served in either House of Congress, with the single exception of John Quincy Adams. The late President Garfield said of him that he possessed greater native ability than any man he had ever personally known, except Mr. Lincoln. The lack of scholastic training was apparent in his speeches, but they were both eloquent and logical. Few men ever possessed a clearer, stronger, or more musical voice for public speaking, and no man ever spoke with more earnestness than he did. He impressed his auditors that he believed what he said. He told no anecdotes, attempted no pleasantries. Perhaps to the unvarying earnestness of his delivery, coupled with his dauntless moral and physical courage and unspotted personal integrity, is due the fact that he had a stronger hold upon the confidence and affection of the Democratic party of Tennessee than any man in her history except Andrew Jackson.

As early as 1828 Mr. Johnson organized a workingman's party, and we have high authority for the statement that it was the first regularly organized workingman's party in the United States. With this organization as a nucleus Johnson launched into public life. Even at that early day there was favoritism shown to the rich in the administration of local government, municipal, county, and State, though not a thousandth part as great as in these later times of prosperity and colossal fortunes. These discriminations against the poor Mr. Johnson passionately and fearlessly denounced. The people rallied to him, and three times he was elected alderman; three times he was elected mayor. In 1835 he was elected to the lower house of the legislature of Tennessee. In 1837 he was defeated for reelection by Hon. Brookins Campbell, who sixteen years later was a member of this body; and this was the only defeat he sustained in his long career which terminated in the White House. It was his gratification two years later to defeat Mr. Campbell, who never again contested with him the leadership of his party. In 1841 he was elected to the State senate. In 1843 he was elected a member of this body and four times reelected. In 1853 he was elected governor of Tennessee, defeating the Hon. Gustavus A. Henry, celebrated as the "eagle orator" of the State, and a kinsman of Patrick Henry. In this contest his election was by the narrow majority or 2,040 votes, but the governor elected two years previously was a Whig. In 1855 he was again elected by 2,020 votes, his Whig competitor in this race having been Hon. Meredith P. Gentry, for fourteen years a distinguished member of this House, whom Ex-President John Quincy Adams describes in his "Memoirs" as "the greatest natural orator he had ever known." In 1857 Mr. Johnson was elected to the United States Senate by the unanimous suffrage of his party.

From his entrance into this body in 1843 he took a conspicuous rank. He participated freely in debate; advocated "tariff for revenue only," and other Democratic measures. But on one question he differed with his associates of the southern States of both parties. He introduced and for ten years so ably and persistently advocated the passage of a bill giving 160 acres of public land to "the landless and homeless," as he expressed it, as to excite the admiration of John Quincy Adams, as shown in his "Memoirs." If not the originator of the homestead bill, he for so long a period persistently and ably advocated it as to have been generally accredited with having been its father, though recent political writers have given the credit of the origination of that beneficent measure to a former Speaker of this House, Hon. Galusha A. Grow, who never opened his mouth on this subject until ten years after Johnson had introduced into this House his homestead bill, and which he reintroduced into the Senate in 1857 on his entrance into that body, after four years' service as governor of Tennessee. It was passed before the civil war, but was vetoed by President Buchanan. Still the persistent and able advocate of this measure had the pleasure of seeing it enacted into law with immaterial modifications in 1862, when it was approved by President Lincoln. The passage of this greatly beneficent measure giving 160 acres of the public land to any citizen who would settle upon and cultivate it was one of the greatest blessings ever conferred by a single act of Congress.

To Andrew Johnson more than any other man was due the credit for the passage of this bill which has done so much for the development of our western country. In the last race made by Mr. Johnson, in 1851, for reelection to this body, the Whig party had no candidate and his opponent was a Democrat of the Calhoun school, an eloquent and polished orator, Landon C. Haynes, afterwards a member of the Confederate States senate at Richmond. The main issue was Mr. Johnson's homestead policy, Mr. Haynes representing on this question the prevailing sentiment of the Democratic party, and objected to the "giving away" of the public domain, because "it was so far off as to be practically beyond the poor emigrant's reach." He said "a gift of 160 acres of the surface of the moon would be more desirable, for when the 'Queen of Night' rode through the heavens in the splendor of her full-orbed glory the poor man could at least have the satisfaction of gazing upon his distant and unattainable possession and feel that he had a home on another planet." But while the enterprising homesteaders for forty-four years have been making what Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, termed "the wild lands of the West, fit only for the habitation of wild animals and wilder Indians," the abodes of millions of as moral, intelligent, and enterprising citizens as the Republic boasts, and have transferred the center of population and political power beyond the Ohio, Mr. Haynes's quarter section of the icy moon still remains unentered. I will add that the Massachusetts statesman, Mr. Quincy, like Mr. Haynes, held to the theory that a State had the right to secede from the Union.

The greatest service Mr. Johnson rendered his country was from the inception to the end of the civil war. With the exception of Stephen A. Douglas, he was the only Democrat in the United States Senate in 1860–61, North or South, who was loyal to the Union of the States. The speech he delivered in the Senate on the 19th and 20th of December, 1860, was the first voice from the South in that body in favor of preserving the Government, and it electrified the country. His demand that the Federal Union be preserved at whatever cost of blood or treasure is pronounced by Hon. A. H. Stephens, in his book, "War Between the States," as having had perhaps a more powerful effect in its consequences than any single speech ever delivered. Substantially it was so described by Thomas L. Clingman, a Senator from North Carolina at that time. In mentioning this matter I do not desire to arouse partisan feelings here, but I do it simply to do justice to his history.

In 1862, at the earnest solicitation of President Lincoln, Mr. Johnson resigned his seat in the United States Senate to become provisional, or military, governor of Tennessee. In this position he rendered his country such signal service that it led to his nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1864. As military governor he exercised the dual functions of soldier and civilian official. He organized and put in the Union Army thousands of soldiers. He reestablished within two-thirds and more of the State (all of its territory within the Union lines) the civil courts, appointing judges, clerks of courts, sheriffs, and other State officers. Under his initiative a Presidential electoral ticket was put in the field in 1864 which carried Tennessee for Lincoln. True, the vote of the State was not counted, because the then leader of this House, Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, opposed allowing a restoration of any seceding State to its rights in the Union until universal negro suffrage had been granted and the property of leading secessionists had been confiscated. But Mr. Stevens's objections to counting the vote of Tennessee were permitted to prevail only because the vote of said State was not needed. With the great majority of the Confederates then in the army, Tennessee gave an honest majority for Mr. Lincoln's reelection, and its electoral vote would have been counted had it been needed to continue Mr. Lincoln's administration in power, without which the preservation of the Union would have been doubtful.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of the aid given by the loyal men of the Southern States in the preservation of the Union, and in this work East Tennessee stands preeminent. Her steadfast loyalty was an inspiration not only to Kentucky, Missouri, and other border slave States, but to the North as well.

Mr. Justice Harlan has expressed the opinion that but for the Union sentiment in Kentucky and East Tennessee, and the Union soldiers furnished by both, secession would have been triumphant. Besides, East Tennessee was an important military thoroughfare and a strategic point of greatest importance. To the Union armies East Tennessee furnished 35,000 volunteers, and not hirelings and conscripts. And this, too, without the promise or expectation of bounty. In the Century Magazine of February, 1885, in an article on the battle of Shiloh, William Preston Johnston, son of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, says his father's army—

> Had been weakened by the necessity of keeping thousands of troops in East Tennessee to overawe the Union population of that section, so as to guard the only line of railroad communication between Tennessee and Virginia.
> This hostile section—

He adds—

> penetrated the heart of the Confederacy like a wedge, and flanked and weakened General Johnston's line of defense, requiring, as it did, constant vigilance and repression.

Thus wrote Colonel Johnston in reply to the criticisms of his father for the evacuation of Bowling Green and the loss of Forts Henry and Donelson. Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, Missouri, West Virginia, and East Tennessee contributed 315,282 white men in defense of the Union, while 23,045 came from other Southern States, making a grand total of 338,327.

It is thus shown that of the grand total of the Union Army, nearly one-eighth came from the Southern States, and without this help the national cause would not have triumphed. The struggle was terribly hard and long, and sometimes doubtful. With considerably more than 300,000 men taken from the fighting force for the Union and given to the Confederacy, the success of the Federal Government could not have been hoped for. The indebtedness of the national cause to the Union men of the South was perceived very clearly while war was flagrant, but it has been much obscured to the public mind of late years by the partisan custom of calling all the States in which slavery existed "rebel States." More to refresh the memory of those who once knew the truth, and to inform those who are imbibing erroneous conceptions regarding the parties to the civil war, it is worth while to set forth the facts bearing on this question.

The southern men who fought for the Union have enjoyed the sweetest victory ever vouchsafed to the champions of a righteous cause. They have not only seen the cause triumph when, but for their help, it must have failed; they have lived also to see the men of their own States, over whom they triumphed, confessing their satisfaction that the contest ended as it did. But the real rock of unionism at the South was not a man, but a country and a people. The mountain uplift of eastern Tennessee, eastern Kentucky, and western North Carolina was a barrier against which the waves of disunion dashed only to be shattered. The spirit of its men, who fled by squads and singly through the mountains to get a musket, a Federal uniform, and to return, together with the unconquerable hearts of its magnificent women, was the real rock of unionism—the invincible force. But what of the leadership? On this plateau—pushed forward as Lookout Mountain pushes its rugged force above its fellows, erect, inflexible, defiant—stands, and will continue to stand by the consenting voice of future generations, Andrew Johnson as one of its bravest and ablest leaders.

But it is not true, as erroneously supposed by many, that Andrew Johnson was chiefly instrumental in influencing the people of eastern Tennessee to adhere to the Union cause. A majority of the people of East Tennessee had been Whigs since Mr. Johnson's entrance into political life, and were therefore more susceptible to the influence of the patriotic teaching of their old Whig leaders—Thomas A. R. Nelson, Horace Maynard, and William G. Brownlow—and hence it is not strange that a large majority of those who volunteered in the Federal service or remained loyal at home were men who had been raised and educated in the political faith of Henry Clay. While the district I have the honor to represent had sent Mr. Johnson to Congress, the other two East Tennessee districts had been Whig, and in both of his races for governor, in 1853 and in 1855, he was defeated in East Tennessee. His election in both instances named, as well as to the United States Senate in 1857, was by the vote of the other sections of the State. But of the 35,000 men in the Union Army from Tennessee Mr. Johnson had been the idolized leader of about 12,000 of them. And by this reference not the slightest reflection is cast upon the justly acknowledged influence of Andrew Johnson, but he belonged to a party smaller than himself and more in sympathy with secession, and with which, on account of his heroic stand for the National Union, his former leadership was greatly impaired, making, therefore, his own steadfast loyalty the more meritorious and conspicuous.

General Grant, in his Memoirs, says great credit is due Gen. John A. Logan because, through his influence and leadership in southern Illinois, two or three thousand men entered the Union Army who would not but for his example and influence have done so. Then how deeply grateful should the country feel toward the courageous statesman who, in the midst of the armed enemies of his country, courageously upheld the flag of our fathers?

It was the misfortune of Mr. Johnson to incur the animosity of political leaders in both parties. Some southern men have not forgiven him for opposing secession, and some of the North for opposing the Congressional plan of reconstruction. In both instances he was right, and time has vindicated his judgment. He was a follower of Andrew Jackson and, with that great man, always denied the right of a State to secede from the Union. It was but natural that he who in his own person was an exemplification of the theory of our Government that in this Republic of equal opportunity "the poor man's son, if he have talent and genius, may climb the steep where fame's proud temple shines afar" should oppose the disruption of the Government whose highest honors, next to the Presidency, he had already enjoyed. He was not a traitor to the Republican party, as has been alleged, because he never claimed to be a member of that party. He was nominated for the Vice-Presidency as a war Democrat by a convention which assembled under the name of "the National Union convention." His admirers do not claim that he had no imperfections; but as an American citizen I am proud to know that he had no weaknesses that affected his personal or official integrity. The conflicts of party in which he figured, always as a leader, were the bitterest of our entire political history, and they left scars not yet wholly eradicated, either North or South. As that splendid citizen, Gen. Horace Porter, has recently said of John Paul Jones it may be said of Andrew Johnson—"His enemies opened their flood gates of calumny. No misrepresentation of his acts was too gross, no distortion of history too monstrous." These attacks on the character and motives of Andrew Johnson succeeded in a large measure in setting him before the world as General Porter said of Jones, "in an aspect that was a vicious caricature of his true nature."

There are people—

> Who compound for sins they are inclined to
> By damning those they have no mind to.

It was the misfortune of Andrew Johnson to immediately succeed Abraham Lincoln. Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Grant are the only Presidents we have had who would not have been dwarfed into insignificance by comparison to that matchless man. Of him it may be said, as it was of Washington:

> Of all the men who have ever lived, he was the greatest of good men and the best of great men.

There are Ishmaelites who, unmindful of the splendid virtues of great men and their distinguished services to their country and to their fellow-men, derive great satisfaction from an unsparing examination of their character by the miscroscope. The foibles of a Washington or Grant, in the minds of little men, are serious enough to eclipse their transcendent virtues. No other country, ancient or modern, can, in the same period of time, show so many wise and patriotic heads of government as the United States of America from its first President to the present period of our history.

Andrew Johnson was more than a Democratic partisan. He was a leader and molder of public opinion. By self-education, environment, and instinct he was a believer in the sovereignty of the people. He was a Jacksonian Democrat. He was opposed to the tendency of the country, now more and more apparent, toward a plutocracy. This was the spirit of the speech he delivered on his inauguration as Vice-President, and by some such sentiments were then deemed so out of place that it was regarded as evidence of intoxication. By some he was called a demagogue. Chatham, Mirabeau, Patrick Henry, Samuel Adams, and Jefferson were all demagogues, but they were not of the vulgar kind. They were the creators of public opinion, not its creatures. Chatham told the King of England that the people were His Majesty's masters. So did Patrick Henry and Adams. Mirabeau told the French King that privilege led to revolution. And Andrew Johnson, in his Vice-Presidential inauguration address on the 4th of March, 1865, reminded the heads of Government, Senators, Cabinet ministers, and Supreme Court justices, that the people were the source of power. He would have included the trusts if trusts had then been organized. Andrew Johnson was a demagogue in the higher and nobler sense—a demagogue who believed in the people.

Of great men, whether living or dead, the truth may be spoken. Simple justice to the memory of Andrew Johnson does not require that the forbearance of his enemies be supplicated. The rigid critic might not regard him as an exemplar, either in morals or politics. Very few are the men whom I would hold up as exemplars in either, but the qualities I have ascribed to him may well be emulated by some public men of to-day, upon whom an inscrutable Providence has devolved the responsibilities of high office. He was not a member of any church, unless it was the church militant, for life with him was always warfare. His honesty was never questioned; the smell of official or personal corruption was never upon his garments. Party spirit and the man with the muck rake have put his fame under a cloud for more than a generation, but posterity will see in him a pure patriot and courageous statesman. It was meet that the flag of his country should be entwined about his coffin and his head pillowed upon the Constitution as he had requested.

Of the thousands who attended his funeral there were not many of the great and wealthy, not many in office. But the plain people, of whom President Lincoln was so fond, were there because they loved him and they believed he had always had their interests at heart. From the workshops and the farms there came to his burial by the thousands the men with hands hardened by toil and faces bronzed by the sun. They honored him for that sterling integrity which never soiled his soul with peculation, which never betrayed the people's trust for private gain. They honored him for that nobility of soul which had no scorn for the poor and no sycophancy for the rich and powerful.

It is the duty of patriotism to cherish and perpetuate the memories of the mighty dead. Personality is power. Dead or alive it draws. But great personalities and notable places are not all in the more populous, wealthy, and powerful States. Tennessee has cradled and given opportunity to as many great personalities in proportion to its population as any other State. In Greeneville is the little tailor shop of the seventeenth President of the United States, on which is still hanging the sign, "A. Johnson, Tailor," and near by is a beautiful monument erected to his memory on a high hill in view of the lofty mountains that join in eternal embrace his native and adopted States. In Tennessee were the homes of John Sevier, the hero of Kings Mountain; of Andrew Jackson, the hero of New Orleans; Edmund P. Gaines, the hero of Fort Erie; of Davy Crockett, of the Alamo; Sam Houston, of San Jacinto; President James K. Polk; Commodore Matthew F. Maury, discoverer of the currents of the sea; Admiral Farragut; N. B. Forrest, "the Wizard of the Saddle," and Isham G. Harris, the great war governor of the South; Hugh Lawson White, John Bell, Thomas A. R. Nelson, Horace Maynard, Meredith P. Gentry, James C. Jones, statesmen and orators whose public acts are an imperishable part of the records of their State and nation, and last, but not least, Andrew Johnson.

These names will never be forgotten in Tennessee. The State honors herself in honoring their memory. "The sun and stars will shine in their seasons," but revolving years will neither quench nor dim the light of their great examples.

Mr. Speaker, Andrew Johnson made his impress on the history of his country, and since only the few have been taught to do him justice as a man, a citizen, and a statesman, I have attempted to speak the truth of him in this feeble tribute. At the unveiling of the monument to his memory at Greeneville, Tenn., there was one who spoke of him as he was and as he is to-day, enshrined in American hearts. Hon. George W. Jones, of Tennessee, served with Mr. Johnson in the State legislature a number of years, for ten years was his colleague in this House, and was his intimate personal friend and associate, knowing the great commoner perhaps better than he was known by any other man. Mr. Jones delivered the oration on the occasion referred to, and as he so completely covered the life and history of that great man, I desire to embody his remarks in concluding my speech, as being the history of a remarkable American life that should be preserved in the official records of the country.

Mr. Jones said:

ORATION.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The ceremony performed in our presence to-day discovers to the eyes of this assemblage the monument, erected by his children, to mark the resting place of the remains of Andrew Johnson. The occasion has been deemed appropriate for an oration commemorative of the life and character of that remarkable man, and at the solicitation of those children and numerous friends, while sincerely distrustful of my ability, I have accepted the duty. The reason for my selection lies chiefly in the fact that for a period of forty years it was my fortune to have been intimately associated with him, and that our services in public station, during the period in which I acted, was fundamentally accordant in political views. The antecedents of both were somewhat similar also, and conduced to render us congenial, and to establish relations—both public and private—of a sympathetic friendship, which were not severed at any period of his eventful career. The opportunities of this relationship have been held to qualify me to speak of him as he was, to analyze his characteristics, to interpret his motives, and to portray the events of his laborious and tumultuous life in the light which may serve as a guide to the estimate in which posterity may hold him. This task I do not regard myself equal to, and were it otherwise, neither time nor the proprieties of the occasion would permit a discourse requiring a review of one of the most important periods in the political history of our Government. This, indeed, will be the duty of the elaborate historian, who shall write of the man and his times after the roar of the combat shall be forgotten and the passion it aroused shall have given place to reason. In the shaping of great events, he wrought with rare vigor and power, and his life will project a commanding figure on the canvas of history. To that repository his fame may be safely committed. The time to-day may be profitably employed in recounting the narrative of his wonderful course from orphanage and obscurity to exalted station and world-wide renown, and in reflecting on the mental and moral attributes which enabled him to overcome these obstacles and achieve results so grand. In this aspect his life is a lesson of absorbing interest and instruction; and though it is not possible to speak of it without reference to eras of fierce political conflict, I shall endeavor to do so justly and candidly, remembering for him that he is dead, and for the living that the truth in regard to great characters who may become exemplars is all that is valuable.

Nearly three years have elapsed since Mr. Johnson, but recently elected to a seat in the highest council chamber of the Government, and apparently in robust health for one who had nearly reached the limit of three score and ten years, was suddenly stricken, and his spirit summoned from the scenes of earth. The unexpected announcement thrilled the people of the United States with a sense of sadness. Those who had admired and supported him, as well as those who had not, felt that a great man had fallen—in the figure of Scripture, "that a standard bearer on the walls had fainted"—and that a public bereavement was suffered. The bells in cities were tolled. The public buildings exhibited the insignia of mourning. The flag of the nation hung at half-mast. The day of his burial was respected in a suspension of the official business of the public. Numerous meetings of the people assembled to express the universal sense of loss. At a later date funeral pageants were formed in honor of his memory, notably one at the capital of this State, whose public servant he had been so long. Still later, on the meeting of Congress, a day was designated on which the representatives of the people should, in resolutions and spoken eulogies, voice the sentiment of the nation regarding his death; and in these political friends and foes united in the language of homage. Here at his home his removal was as if one of yonder mountains had "bowed its tall head to the plain." First receiving a mark of the public confidence from this people nearly half a century before, his luminous ascent to supreme station had reflected honor upon them, and his fame was cherished here as a household god by everyone. No tribute of tongue or pen or ostentatious parade paid to his memory was so true or just as the homely outpouring of the people, and the children of the people, who had been his early and steadfast friends, on the day his body was interred at this spot. The obsequies were not elaborate in equipage and vain display of ceremony. They were such only as he would have desired—a concourse of the people irrespective of social rank, subdued in grief, and quietly performing the last service we can offer our fellow-men. They were as becoming as they were spontaneous and unaffected—the simple and sincere offering of those who knew him best and esteemed him most. And thus, after a life of extraordinary energy in a great field of action, illustrating both extremes of fortune, amid the mingled admiration and regret of a continent, his mortal part was laid in the earth, and men turned away, thenceforward to contemplate him in the steadily receding view of history.

To trace this life since he first appeared in the then village yonder, more than fifty years ago, is a story of the marvels possible to indomitable will and inflexible honesty, allied to inborn talents. But who that saw him then—and there may be those living who hear me—would have ventured to predict that the uncouth youth, poor and unlettered, unknown and unfriended save by the widowed mother who was his companion and his dutiful burden, was to become the recipient of all these honors, in life and in death, I have so feebly depicted? How it came to pass let the sequel show.

Andrew Johnson was born in Raleigh, N. C., December 29, 1808. He was the son of Jacob Johnson, an humble man, who filled at various times several petty offices in that town. He was quite poor and unable to give his children even the rudiments of an education. He died when his subsequently illustrious son was in the fourth year of his age. In the history of men who have become eminent early loss of the father is quite a frequent circumstance. It was the case with Jackson and Clay, for example. One might speculate if in characters having the germs of greatness this apparently adverse stroke of fate did not tend to develop the faculty of self-reliance, an element afterwards so prominent. At 10 years of age Andrew was apprenticed to a tailor in Raleigh, and a few months before the expiration of his term of indenture he left his employment and his native place on account of a boyish misdemeanor in which he was implicated. In a year or more he returned, having spent the time at work in his trade at Laurens Court House, S. C. Learning that his former master had removed some distance from Raleigh, he sought him, made apology for his misconduct, and tendered payment for the unperformed period of service for which he owed. This honorable offer was not received properly, and the proud spirit of the youth revolted, and he resolved to seek a new home. His gaze turned westward, and for him, indeed, "the star of empire" was brilliant with destiny. Having traveled in the humblest manner with his dependent mother, in the fall of 1826—then 18 years of age—he arrived in Greeneville, Tenn.

Here he opened that shop which has become historic, and sat diligently at his trade, approving himself a good workman and acquiring the confidence of those who employed him. Not long after, he married her who rests by his side beneath that shaft, justly sharing the honors paid to him. Their temperaments were unlike—he, fervid and aggressive; she, calm and retiring—but their union was fortunate, and by her aid he was better prepared for the long encounter which fate held in reserve. He had never gone to school. Incited by listening to readings from a copy of The American Speaker—a work of oratorical exercises—while an apprentice on the board, he mastered the alphabet and learned to read. Until his marriage, his education consisted only in such imperfect reading as the intervals from toil allowed him. His wife taught him writing and arithmetic—acquisitions which served to enlarge the sphere of his capacity and stimulate the sacred thirst for knowledge. Under her instructions his self-education was pursued concurrently with his daily labor and far into the night when other mechanics were accustomed to rest. Such was the resolute spirit of the man, as even at this time his nascent ambition was prefiguring the career on which he had set his heart.

His thrift in his vocation and his studious habits and active intelligence were not long in attracting attention, and in 1828 he was elected an alderman of this town, and reelected in the year following. In 1830 he was made mayor, a considerable dignity for a young man of 22 years of age. This office he filled for several years with efficiency. He was appointed a trustee of Rhea Academy in 1834. This was the year in which the second constitution for the State was submitted to the people. He advocated its adoption, as its features, in the main, were more democratic than the instrument of 1796, which it was designed to supersede. Thus, in the incipiency of his public life is observed a devotion to that principle which became its shibboleth—the bringing of the government nearer to the people. In the year following the first general assembly under the new constitution was elected, and he presented himself as a candidate for representative. The division of the people into parties, afterwards so long known as Whig and Democratic, was just then occurring, and the instincts and modes of thought of Mr. Johnson at once aligned him with the latter, at whose head was Andrew Jackson. His candidacy, however, was not wholly acceptable to some who assumed to be local leaders of the party, but, nothing caring, he engaged in debate with his popular competitor, and sustained himself so well as to silence all objections in his own ranks. He was elected, and it was in the house of representatives in that assembly that your speaker, as a fellow-member, formed his acquaintance. In that body, though but few, if any, discerned the elements of character he afterwards developed, he made more than the ordinary impression of a new member. He was punctual, laborious, but not unduly forward. He kept a vigilant eye on the legislation proposed in molding the order of things under the new constitution, and judiciously participated in debate.

His style was less assured and vehement than afterwards, but nevertheless ready and pointed. Though plainly clad and not so robust in figure as in later life, his marked and expressive features presented him well and engaged attention when he arose to speak. An important measure of that session was an act for internal improvements—the building of a system of macadamized turnpikes at the expense of the State treasury. Mr. Johnson's course in regard to this was strongly illustrative of candor and boldness, as well as of tenacious adherence to constitutional limits in legislation, which he ever so consistently and signally displayed. His own mountain-bound section of the State, under the operation of the law, would derive benefits greatly desired—ready means of intercommunication, as well as accessibility to other sections, then quite difficult. It was, therefore, popular in that region, and a number of its leading advocates were from East Tennessee. Mr. Johnson gravely doubted the power of the general assembly to impose a tax upon the people for an extraordinary purpose without the previous consent expressed at the polls, and seriously questioned the abstract right and propriety of incurring an indebtedness of the State, bearing interest, for any object, however desirable or laudable. From a fund thus acquired he was jealous to apprehend misapplication of its use. With these views he strenuously opposed the enactment of the measure, notwithstanding the expected advantage to accrue to the people whom he represented. In this early step there was nothing of the odor of demagoguery, which since has been erroneously charged against him. Indeed, to this manly independence of the popular desire was, in great part, to be attributed his defeat for reelection in 1837. Two years later, however, he appealed a third time to the people. Some of the consequences of the favorite measure which he had foretold had been observed, and he was triumphantly returned. His bearing and legislative service at this session gave evidence of enlarged information on questions meriting public attention and of ripening powers. A single defeat had not discouraged him nor in the least relaxed his ardor. In 1840 he was nominated a candidate, for the State at large, for Presidential elector on the Democratic ticket, and appeared in debate with various gentlemen of distinction on the opposing ticket. His experience in speaking before the people and in the halls of legislation had begotten confidence in his capacity. He was thoroughly informed upon the current questions and principles at issue, and in these forensic struggles he bore himself the equal of any whom he met. Those who witnessed them perceived that he was in a sphere in which he was qualified to become eminent. He was elected a member of the State senate in the year following. The period was one of intense political antagonism. The Whig party, successful in the Federal elections, had suffered a disaster in the early death of President Harrison and the alleged defection of his successor to its principles in an important object to its great leaders—the establishment of a Bank of the United States. Mr. Johnson was then, as ever afterwards, a determined opponent of powerful fiscal corporations, holding them to be inimical to the rights and interests of the mass of the people and promotive of public corruption. He felt it to be a public duty to oppose by every legitimate means the ascendancy in Congress of the party advocating this measure. In great part this question entered as an element in the election of United States Senators, which then devolved upon the general assembly, and Mr. Johnson was one of the Democratic majority of the State senate—known in the political parlance of the time as "the immortal thirteen"—whose refusal to act thwarted an election. This produced an angry contest, and the arguments in attack and defense were of a mixed legal and partisan character. At this session Mr. Johnson was the author of a bill providing for a scheme of internal improvements, which he held to be safely practicable and not obnoxious to the objections which he had urged to the measure of a previous legislature.

He had now achieved a reputation coextensive with the State. In his six years of service in the general assembly he had exhibited indefatigable industry, astuteness and skill in debate, a candid record upon all issues, and unbending courage. He aspired to a wider field of action and announced himself a candidate for the Federal House of Representatives, and after an arduous canvass was elected, and entered that body in the thirty-fifth year of his age. It was the fortune of your speaker to enter it simultaneously and to serve with him during the ten years of his membership. In that forum, then containing a number of distinguished men of long experience in the national councils, and receiving at that time a number also of those who afterwards acquired high renown, the ambitious Member from the First Tennessee district doubtless felt painfully the grip of those "twin jailors of the daring heart"—"low birth and iron fortune"—which had condemned him to educational deficiency. But, nothing daunted, he assiduously addressed himself to attaining whatever could better qualify him for the position. He had neither taste nor natural aptitude for enjoying what many esteem as the recreative honors of membership in Congress. He regarded it as a theater of high and important duty—an arena of public usefulness, in which the gratification of a just ambition was a legitimate reward.

In the sessions of that body he was diligently attentive to the business transpiring; in the intervals he was discharging duty on committees, or intently seeking information from the library and every source at his command. He knew no idle hours, but was incessantly equipping for the discharge of the functions which the people had committed to his trust, and the making for himself an honorable fame. He was somewhat sensitive on one point, and quickly resented a derogatory allusion. In his first session, in the course of a discussion on the tariff, a colleague from this State made reference to his mechanical occupation. Mr. Johnson instantly interrupted him, and demanded to know if he spoke contemptuously. The intention was promptly disavowed. It is a mistake to suppose that he was accustomed to artfully introduce this feature of his life to propitiate popular favor. Neither was he ashamed of it, but quietly proud rather, and prouder still of the free institutions which fostered the effort to rise from humble station. During the long period of his service in the Lower House of Congress he was a frequent partaker in the debates on all of the leading questions before the body. The two great parties alternated in predominance, and the lines of division were distinctly drawn. As a rule, he acted with his political associates, but there was a vein of independence in his course which on occasions resisted the trammel of party dictation, and when moving in concert his reasons were always his own. This ingredient of character early attracted the notice of the eminent and sagacious John Quincy Adams, so long an ornament of the House, who spoke of him as an acute and original thinker, and foresaw the distinction of which he was capable. Out of this element in his composition grew a number of frank utterances which produced criticisms among his political friends at home, and cost him several severe contests for the retention of his seat—those of 1847 and 1851 will be remembered. Before the people, however, the formidable disaffection in party ranks notwithstanding, he was invincible. His first effort in Congress was a speech in favor of the bill refunding the fine imposed on General Jackson by Judge Hall in 1815. He spoke also on the measure for the annexation of Texas, and during its course, in a number of speeches, defended the justness of the war with Mexico. His speeches on tariff revision, which resulted in the law of 1846, exhibited thorough research and knowledge of that intricate subject. The erection of special industries into monopolies by a protective tariff system, he held to be partial and unjust, and grossly injurious to the interests of the most numerous classes of the people, and moreover, in contravention of the cardinal principles of free government. In regard to the Oregon boundary line and the threatened difficulty with the British Government he sustained the policy of President Polk. He was a strenuous advocate of retrenchment in the expenses of the Government, which he perceived to be unnecessarily and inordinately large in many features, chiefly so in extraordinary and useless offices and large salaries. He favored simple and economical administration in the interest of the toiling taxpayers, and as a potent instrumentality in repressing the inevitable tendency to corruption. A speech on this subject of great earnestness was construed as an attack on the then Democratic Administration, and gave umbrage in some quarters. But it was not his way to withhold the expression of his views under dread of any disapprobation. In a debate arising upon an important question then prominent he delivered an incisive speech in advocacy of the Executive veto power, in which he traced a contrast between its wholesome use as a feature of republican government and the kingly negative under a monarchical system. He defended it as a conservative clause of the Constitution, designed to restrain hasty, improvident, and sectional legislation, proper to be wielded by the Chief Magistrate as the representative of the whole people. Perhaps the most glowing dream of his ambition did not forecast the era twenty years later, when he should boldly exercise it in circumstances perilous with the crisis of his public career. About this period he initiated his long and persistent struggle to secure the enactment of a law granting a homestead of 160 acres of the public lands to any citizen who should occupy and cultivate a part of it for a specified number of years. This measure encountered both discouragement and opposition from various sources. The great and overshadowing question of slavery and its complication with Territorial settlement was an obstructing prejudice to its intrinsic merits. Upon this rich and vast domain which it was proposed to reserve for this purpose the eager eyes of incorporated greed, vulture-like, were already gloating. The homestead law, designed as a bounty to enterprise and frugal industry, and the encouragement of thrifty citizenship—the richest treasure a nation may have—but a powerful influence strove to retain it for ripening schemes of selfish speculation adroitly masked. But Andrew Johnson conspicuously championed the measure, and at a time and under circumstances when considerations of sectional popularity would have deterred a less intrepid and independent man. He may be said to have been its projector, and his name is indissolubly identified with this legislation, so beneficient to thousands, and so sagacious and statesmanlike. It is one of that class of laws which crown their authors with the blessings of generations of people. The many homes on the teeming acres of the great West stand as a monument to the wisdom and courage of Mr. Johnson.

In the agitation ensuing upon the territorial acquisitions from Mexico with reference to slavery, as a southern man Mr. Johnson steadily upheld the rights and interests of his section as guaranteed under the Constitution. In the exciting debates to which this portentious question led he did not assume extreme ground touching the institution of slavery, nor advocate its extension as a means of maintaining the balance of political power between the free and slave States. He did, however, defend its constitutional sanction where it then existed, and in the common territory of the United States, as a species of property as inviolable as any other. As to the policy and perpetuity of this peculiar institution, he held that the former was settled in the fact that it existed, and was thoroughly incorporated in the body of society, and that the latter was a question out of the province of the powers of the General Government, and determinable only by a variety of economical considerations, as time might develop. An aggressive war upon it as a moral and social wrong, which was to be hedged by inhibiting its spread, he despised as fanatical and violative of the spirit in which the Federal Union was formed, and deprecated it as threatening to incite a sentiment imperiling alike the Union and the Constitution, the safeguard of all institutions. As a scheme of adjustment of the then aspect of the question, he did not approve some of the features of the compromise of 1850, but finally voted for the five measures which it comprehended. One intimately conversant with Mr. Johnson's views during the long and troublous era caused by these issues could but know that he was loyal to the legal rights of the slave States in this respect and to every degree, and was prepared to maintain them under the Constitution and within the Union, and could not but know, also that he would not surrender the integrity of the Federal Government to preserve slavery or any other single interest whatever. The destruction of that he regarded as tantamount to the sacrifice of all that could be held dear to the American people and as the culmination of irretrievable political disaster, and would put nothing in the scale against its preservation.

On March 4, 1853, his first period of service in Congress terminated, and he retired from the public employment, but for a short time, a few months only. In the spring of that year he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for governor of Tennessee, and thereabout the truth of history requires a statement. While recognizing their necessity, Mr. Johnson was never an adept in party conventions, and he was not present when this honor was tendered him. In Congressional redistricting, under the census of 1850, the First, so long represented by him, had been made doubtful or adverse to the success of a Democratic candidate. Fortuitously, in the fall preceding your speaker met a prominent member of the party, who urged that the coming gubernatorial candidate should be from East Tennessee, and named Mr. Johnson, and he consented; and he, while in Washington City, by letter requested a distinguished leader in the party in Nashville, who would be present at the convention as a delegate or otherwise, to withdraw his name from before the convention in the event he should think it necessary to do so in order to harmonize the convention. There it rested, so far as his (Mr. Johnson's) personal interference was concerned. On the assembling of the convention, at a preliminary consultation of delegates the name of the gentleman to whom had been confided Mr. Johnson's interest was himself recommended to the convention for nomination as the Democratic candidate. He felt the embarrassment, and frankly stating it to the convention, requested that his name should not be presented to the convention, and thereupon Mr. Johnson was nominated by the convention. In the conferment of this honor, no imputation of overreaching can in the least impeach his manliness. His competitor was Gustavus A. Henry, a gentleman of high character, and famed for commanding eloquence and ability, and the field of contest was the entire State. Mr. Johnson reversed the political majority of the previous election, and was inaugurated governor in October. His address on this occasion contained several passages which provoked sarcastic criticism. His administration of State affairs was upright and acceptable, and marked in some features by his characteristic vigor and independence of precedent. He was unanimously nominated for reelection, and the contest following was one of the most remarkable ever witnessed, as well for its fierceness as for the boldness and ability he displayed, and was, for a time doubtful. Only he, perhaps, could have achieved the result. In this year the disintegration of one of the great parties which had so long disputed the political mastery of the Government gave rise to an organization whose leading tenet was proscriptive of the political rights of citizens of foreign birth and members of the Church of Rome. Oaths of obligation to its purposes and passwords of admission to its councils were alleged of it. It absorbed the mass of that party whose distinctive form had disappeared and very considerable numbers of those who had held opposite political affiliations. It was formidable alike in its construction, its specious principles, and in the support it received from men of high intelligence and unimpeachable character. It opposed the fundamental articles of Mr. Johnson's political creed—his belief in the rights of man irrespective of nativity and in the largest liberty of thought and conscience—as well as his theory of free institutions and aroused the utmost energy of his nature. In political warfare he never favored defensive tactics, but this he assailed like the Mameluke cavalry on a charge.

The intensity of his feeling quickened his powers, and his argument blazed with denunciations as he attacked it in every form. With ridicule he drove it from the intrenchment of secrecy, and with unsparing language he combated its doctrines and designs. The opposing candidate was Meredith P. Gentry, a gentleman of experience and tried capacity, and gifted with copious and sonorous eloquence, and the unusual encounter brought other able speakers to the field. Mr. Johnson's forensic efforts were the highest he had ever exhibited, and his triumph won a national renown. His second term of service as governor of the State passed without a notable incident, and at its conclusion, being now the unquestionable leader of his party, he was, by its unanimous choice, elected to the vacant seat in the United States Senate in 1857.

Nearly twenty years of continuous official life, with the untiring application with which he cultivated his talent for public business, eminently fitted him for that great arena. In his development he had acquired a degree of accomplishment, as well as increased strength, and from the first he was a stalwart figure in the Chamber where the giants of debate—dead and living—were wont to wrestle. Over the political heavens portentous clouds were forming, and the public mind was fevered with anxiety and alarm at the period of his entrance. On the western border were already heard the mutterings of the terrific storm which in a few years was to burst with devastating fury upon the nation. No one described more clearly the ominous aspect, or desired more earnestly to avert the catastrophe, or understood more thoroughly the necessity for a statesmanship at once bold and cautious. He knew the designs of infatuated and reckless leaders—whether they marshalled the sentiment of a vast section of the country under the banner of irrepressible conflict or inculcated another section with the doctrine of national disruption as a means of avoidance and desirable consummation. He held sympathy with neither, but the chief themes of Senatorial discussions were big with the problem. Notwithstanding these, however, there were other matters of great importance which received his attention. He opposed the Pacific Railroad measure on the ancient principles of the Democratic faith, which denied the power of the Government to construct directly or otherwise works of internal improvement, or by aid or subsidies of moneys or lands to ally itself with companies for that object. Not doubting the utility of such a work for purposes of military transportation, on which it was defended, he yet saw vast areas of the public lands about to pass into the grasp of soulless corporations, and engendering of corrupt combinations as a consequence. He was instinctively jealous of these powerful organizations. The infamous history of the Credit Mobilier, fresh in memory, and the conscienceless lobby which hovers now at Washington as another branch of Congress attests his foresight; and all the accruing advantages of the work are questionable compensation for such a train of evils.

The dissensions in the Democratic party regarding the status of slavery in the Territories, which caused the adjournment of the Charleston convention without a nominee, was deeply deplored by Mr. Johnson. In the light of the history of the times, perhaps the result to which it contributed—the election of a sectional President—could not have been averted; though, with a united front of the party North and South a contrary result was possible. During the session of that convention he had been honored with the unanimous vote of his State on repeated ballotings as its Presidential choice, and had there prevailed greater unanimity as to the question at issue it is not improbable that the conservatism of his locality and the inherent constituents of his popularity would have made him the candidate of the convention. The division occurred, and he espoused the cause of that one of the Democratic candidates having the greater following in the Southern States. Over this step he hesitated, and numbers of his friends watched his course with anxiety. In the crisis then imminent his antecedent views warranted the opinion that he would not follow into extreme measures, and to your speaker he firmly said that in the last event he should be for the Government, the Union, and the Constitution. His motive at this time may be assumed to have been the hope that in an alliance with that section of his party from which he apprehended extreme action he could exert a more potent influence to restrain it. The event came, and Congress assembled amid unparalleled excitement. Already the Federal Union was dissolving. Within a fortnight he delivered in the Senate a speech directed against the doctrines and policy of secession and in behalf of the integrity of the Federal Government. It was the ablest effort of his life. Other great speeches, ancient and modern, have displayed more amplitude of learning and rhetorical excellence, but for incisive power and electric boldness—the scence and the theme conspiring for effect—this is unsurpassed. Benton spoke satire of Webster's reply to Hayne thirty years before, when the Union was intact and the danger imaginary, but the most violent antagonist was awed into respect by the thunder of this eloquence when the storm actually burst. All through those three eventful months preceding Mr. Lincoln's inauguration he labored by private appeal and effort to retain a full southern representation in the Senate, arguing that its majority could withstand whatever aggressions the Eexcutive might make and yet save the Republic from detriment, and, on the 6th of February, 1861, when curses from those whom he had long served were hurtling about his head, he made another speech of great force, in which he proclaimed his unalterable determination to cling to the Union, let who would desert.

Upon the adjournment of Congress Mr. Johnson returned to Tennessee, which yet formally adhered to the Federal Government, but under the fall of Sumter the land heaved as with an earthquake. After a futile effort to stay her act of separation, he was compelled to leave the State, not to return until he came as military governor, in March, 1862. At the extra session of Congress, called for July 4, 1861, he advocated the war measures, but, concurrently with the venerable Crittenden in the House of Representatives, he presented resolutions declaring that the war was not waged for conquest and subjugation, nor to destroy existing institutions, but to restore the authority of the Government. The position of military governor was as anomalous and distasteful to him as it was irritating and vexatious to the people, and was assumed at the sacrifice of the better feelings of his nature, and with the hope that its functions might abbreviate and ameliorate the condition of the State to which he owed so much. The prolongation of the struggle dispelled this hope, and much of the exasperation that occurred should be mainly ascribed to the excitement and mutual passion that prevailed. The firmness and vigor of his administration, however, was a powerful adjunct to military operations.

In 1864, at the second candidacy of Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Johnson was named for Vice-President, was elected in connection to that office. The proclamation emancipating the slaves had been issued as a war measure, and the continuance of the contest, then at its fiercest, had virtually effectuated it. For the success of the Federal arms this was the gloomiest period of the struggle, and in the North a large and growing party were clamorous for peace. The Administration feared the political result to be doubtful, and to secure the warm support of the portion of the Democratic party supporting the Government, abandoned the distinctive name of Republican, and nominated Messrs. Lincoln and Johnson as the Union National candidates. As such, and such only, the latter accepted, as the language of his letter to the committee accepting the nomination clearly sets forth. The fact that he was a Democrat, lending his great influence to the Government in its dire strait, was the motive for his selection; and never did he, in faith or in form, detach himself from the Democratic standard. This is a historical fact, elucidating subsequent history, and vindicating him from the charge that he deserted the party which elevated him to the Presidency. Within a few weeks after his accession to the second office in the Government, the armed resistance to its authority surrendered, and almost simultaneously came the tragic death of Mr. Lincoln, and he ascended to the Chief Magistracy. As he took the oath prescribed, the nation already quivering with excitement at the march of events, was dumb with horror at the appalling crime, and never did ruler assumed the reins of power under responsibility more delicate and tremendous. This era, and the conduct of Mr. Johnson as President, will engage the profound attention of him who shall write its truthful history, as philosophy teaching by example. The throes of a four years' civil war, waged with gigantic numbers and fury, had disjointed the constitutional fabric of authority and demoralized alike the victors and the vanquished. Sobriety and reason had deserted, and, as if to crown the catastrophe, an act fitter for the age of the Borgias than the century which saw it had come to horrify and madden. Here was all of opportunity for guilty ambition, invested with power, to engulf the remnant of liberty in the vortex of anarchy, and to emerge itself a despot. In the escape from this danger two causes of rescue may be considered. One will be found in the character of the American people impressed by their institutions. Though liable, as others, to become the temporary sport of passion, the individual sense of responsibility, acquired from habitual participation in the affairs of Government, tends to restore them to soberness and the recovery of their equilibrium. This was then exhibited. The other, and not the least, was in the personality of the President. In that dread time no Cromwellian dreams disturbed his sedate and majestic patriotism. No thought of self-aggrandizement to the injury of his country warped his judgment or betrayed his integrity. To calm the tumult, to reassure confidence, to restablish, in form and in spirit, the free institutions he so much admired, this was his ideal of duty and vision of glory; and to these tasks he addressed himself with wisdom and courage possessed by few in circumstances so perplexing. He invited a continuance in service of the Cabinet of his predecessor, and as the sequel proved, judiciously decided not to convene Congress in extraordinary session. In vindication of justice he promptly brought to trial and execution the conspirators in Mr. Lincoln's murder, for one feature of which he has received much sentimental reproach; but, in this respect, the careful student of that exacting period will fully exonerate him. In a brief time the mass of the Federal Army was disbanded, and in a few months all military trade restrictions with the region lately at strife with the Government were removed, and a general amnesty, with certain reservations, was proclaimed. Simultaneously the work of establishing provisional civil governments in the lately insurgent States, with a view of restoring their autonomy and just relations to the United States Government, was commenced, and with due expedition was completed.

In justification of these legitimate Executive proceedings, just prior to the assembling of Congress he dispatched the General of the Army on an official tour for the purpose of observing the temper of the people in those States and reporting the result of this reorganization on the condition of affairs. This report was submitted to Congress shortly after the delivery of his first message to that body, and its facts sustained the policy adopted. That paper was an elaborate review of the manifold important events of the nine preceding months, a lucid disquisition upon the theory of the Government, and an able exposition of the principles and measures he had pursued. It is replete with statesmanship, and the archives contain no document more noble and patriotic. The fears of his imperious temper, fretted by the persecution he had undergone, was not realized. Elevation had but steadied his faculties, and the leniency and magnanimity expected of the amiable Lincoln, blended with a just security for Federal interests and restoration of the organic rights of States which had revolted, were the essential characteristics of his policy. But with the Congress then met and the one succeeding—which find a fit parallel in the worst features with the long Parliament of England—this wise and correct statesmanship met stern and factious resistance. The message was referred to an extraordinary committee of fifteen, whose perverse counsels dictated a vindictive and vituperative hostility to the President, arrested the peaceful work of reorganization, and, under the name of reconstruction, inspired the dominant majority of Congress to a series of measures whose baneful effects have yet scarcely ceased. Mr. Johnson was charged with the betrayal of the Republican party and of the Republic as well—terms synonymous in the vocabulary of this truculent majority. He had done neither. To the former he had not professed allegiance, either in act or utterance; of the latter, his faithful friendship was almost the sole buttress of protection. This led to a long and acrimonious contest between the President and Congress, to which his previous struggles were puny in comparison. He was deeply indignant, and to a large assemblage before the Executive Mansion he made a counter denunciation. Against the unconstitutional, reckless schemes of that body the heroic element of his character was arrayed, and the rock of Gibraltar was not more sure and firm set than this man. The veto power he had formerly defended, claiming its derivation from a tribunal negative of the people when Rome was a republic, he now wielded in the name of the people and in defense of their constitutional liberties. It was stricken down successively in the instances of the civil rights bill, the freedmen's bureau bill, the bill to enforce enfranchisement of colored men by the States, the bill subordinating States to military district government, and the tenure-of-office bill. He sustained his action in a series of messages which illuminated the subjects of which they treat, at once cogent and conclusive to reason, but not to sheer force of majorities determined to defy it. Still he did not yield, and upon the basis of opinions from his Attorney-General sought to mitigate the mischiefs of the military satrapies set up in the Southern States and to remove from the Cabinet a contumacious member. Infuriated now at his intrepid firmness, the Congressional oligarchy resolved to impeach him on charges dignified as high crimes and misdemeanors, and the nation witnessed the spectacle of its President standing at the bar of the Senate, baited by the minions of a malignant partisanship, and defending his own integrity and that of his great office against the encroachments of faction. No trial in history exceeded this in interest, and had the result been different none ever carried consequences of more pernicious import. For the illustrious accused the ordeal was terrific, but his equanimity was unmoved. Had he been guilty his placid courage would have redeemed his fame. But even in a prejudiced tribunal the convicting majority could not be obtained, and he emerged triumphantly—the sober sentiment of the country condemning his accusers. The period of his Presidency was tempestuous, but it was illustrated with patriotic wisdom, with brilliant administrative vigor, and with honesty. Though encountering more formidable obstacles than any predecessor, he laid down his great trust unimpaired, and his niche in the temple of fame is assured.

On the 4th of March, 1869, he departed from the Capitol for his home in Tennessee, journeying amid ovations of popular approval. At large meetings held at prominent points in the State he testified of his stewardship. He was then just turned of three score years, but his exciting labors had not dimmed his eye nor unnerved his strength, nor was his strong nature satisfied with the score he had left with his fierce antagonists still on the scene of action. He desired to reenter the Senate, to oppose on that field the hurtful measures he had so stoutly fought in one still higher. But other counsels prevailed, and he was not gratified. The mists of prejudice yet lingered in the atmosphere. A few years later he sought entrance to the popular branch of Congress as Representative from the State at large, but under circumstances which again defeated him.

His unyielding spirit never flagged, however, and he finally won the most sincere gratification that his ambition could enjoy. He felt his election to the Senate to be a reversal of any sentence that his loved State had ever passed against him, and it was a proud day when, amid the acclamations of the thronged galleries, he stepped on that floor with her seal in his hand. Nor did the memories of that Chamber—once his court of judgment—render less sweet the sense of his just triumph. The Senate was convened for the special consideration of the vexed question of Louisiana affairs—a condition induced by the legislation he had so sternly combatted. It had then its worst phase—anarchy produced by the lawless domination of its legislature by the Federal military. Against this he spoke with his characteristic power. It was his only and last effort, for, though no sign was given, his fate was impending. In the summer of 1875 he was engaged at his home in the arrangement of his voluminous papers, and there received an earnest invitation to enter the pending political campaign in Ohio, which was of national importance. This was accepted, but during the work of preparation the last message came. Death found him preparing for another battle. It was not to be, and after an illness of a few hours he expired in the presence of his family in the sixty-seventh year of his age. As the announcement flashed over the land, carrying regret to minds considerate of the unsettled political condition, it carried also the thought: He "should have died hereafter."

Mr. Johnson was not the creature of circumstances, otherwise this scene to-day had not been. He carved his own career, mainly without adventitious favor. Perhaps some elements in his own character caused the struggle of his life to be the more severe. A degree of reserve, tinged with distrust, made him less the object of warm esteem and attachment than that of confidence and admiration inspired by the intrinsic elevation of his nature. He was endowed with capacious and resolute faculties which brooked no obstacle and made him superior to cliques and conventions. His only external aid was the liberal institutions of government under which he lived, and of these he felt himself to be a foster son, and for them he cherished an affection which would have made his life, if needed, a sacrifice. A representative democracy offered a theater, and by his own exertions he reared the intellectual and moral structure which his countrymen are proud to honor. There is no frivolous or fictitious component in the character he has left; it is the product of earnest, faithful work, due to laudable aspiration and devoted to the service of his country and his fellow-men.

His personal appearance was familiar here. Of medium height, his figure was compactly shaped, indicating sinewy strength and power of endurence. His step was elastic and his carriage erect. In complexion he was slightly swarthy; his hair in early manhood was quite dark and luxuriant, becoming thinned and silvered in his latter years. His chest was broad and deep, his neck stout but shapely, surmounted by a large and well-formed head. His countenance, with its deep-set, piercing eyes, was one to arrest attention. "On his front deliberation sat, and public care," with an expression habitually anxious, shaded with sadness. Smiles were not frequent with him, but when so moved they were sincere and hearty. His general manner was grave, rather than austere, but quickly showed his feelings—the sterner as well as the gentler. Trained in no school of deportment, he had yet an innate dignity, and while in the Presidential chair the scepter of authority seemed native to his hand. His mind was analytical and logical in cast, the reasoning faculties being predominant. He sought for facts and first principles, and applied them acutely and profoundly. His imagination did not furnish him with figures of fancy, but his fervid nature furnished him with apt resources of illustration and well-chosen language. His power was in clearness of statement and simplicity of argument that the people could follow, and a vehement earnestness which convinced them of his sincerity. In his conflict in debate a personal tone was often observed which was not intended, the result rather of his intense feeling upon the principle or doctrine at issue. Though often in collision, bitterness did not abide with him except to those who had been treacherous or vindictive. Most severely tested from the lowest to the highest point of his fortunes, his decision and force of will was simply grand. Though open to counsel, he formed his own judgment, and his conclusion was immovable. Opposition but fixed it the more firmly, and men called him obstinate, but he stood upon his rendered reasons. He was thoroughly honest in his convictions, and in their defense no danger appalled him. He would have adhered to them at the martyr's stake. His honesty, in the broad sense, was an emphatic trait. That which he believed became a part of him, and he was incorruptible by bribe, either to his purse or his ambition. His official standard of uprightness was lofty, and in an era of corruption he was without blemish. His moral courage in the performance of public duty towered to the sublime, and in this respect their characters are as little different as are the spelling of their names—Andrew Johnson and Andrew Jackson. His tastes were simple and frugal, and the blandishments of station did not debauch them. A modest home in this unpretending town, and the company of his neighbors, sufficed for him who had moved among the more than equal of the great and titled. He did not affect piety and was not communicative of whatever religious views he entertained. So thoughtful as he was, it is probable that he held some, but he kept that account with his Maker alone.

He was not without faults, but they were such as are common to the best of men; and not without errors, but the balance of his qualities, great and small, and of his acts, public and private, is more largely in his favor than that of most men. His political principles were pronounced and steadfast. He was a Jeffersonian Democrat of the intenser type, and believed firmly in the capacity of the people, in their honesty of purpose, and in their fidelity to good government and social order. Though to no man has the term been more offensively applied, he was not a demagogue, and no taint of agrarianism defiled his thoughts. He opposed universal suffrage as alike inexpedient, and unconstitutional in the manner it was proposed. He did not mislead his people. He communed with them frankly, for he did not forget that he was one of them, and had been of the humblest. Occasion came when he differed with the people, and he maintained his opinions with fearless candor. He was devoted to the Constitution of the United States as the chart of the wisest and the freest government ever devised by man. He interpreted it by the letter, and insisted that its powers should not be enlarged by too liberal construction. He regarded it as the palladium of popular government and regulated liberty. He jealously guarded the reserved rights of the States, but held that the union of these States, formed under the Constitution, was essential to their preservation. When it was imperiled, he stood forth its mighty champion. Of that struggle others may wear the military laurels, but to him belongs the civic wreath; and in the catalogue of its history, the impartial verdict of aftertimes will award him the first place for unselfish patriotism and unequaled powers.

The designs and inscriptions on that chaste marble—the eagle, the flag, the scroll, and the simple line, "His faith in the people never wavered"—typify the character it commemorates. Here on this romantic spot, chosen by himself, that shaft will stand, attracting the gaze of those who pass on that great highway yonder leading to the North and to the South, and to the East and to the West. It will become a pilgrim shrine to which generations yet unborn shall journey to pay homage to the memory of one whose name will grow more lustrous as time shall lapse. And these majestic mountains, which will not survive his fame, looking down, shall sentinel the sepulchre of this statesman, patriot, and friend of the people—the defender of the Constitution and the Union.

LETTERS FROM DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC MEN.

Among the letters received by the family from distinguished public men in other States were the following:

[From Governor Robinson, of New York.]

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, May 31, 1878.

Mrs. PATTERSON.

MADAM: I have received your kind invitation to be present at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of our late President, Andrew Johnson, on June 5. Remembering the ability, integrity, and patriotism of the distinguished statesman in whose honor this ceremony will be held, it is with deep regret that I find myself unable to participate in it. Public engagements of the highest importance will detain me at Albany constantly for many days to come, and I am therefore forbidden from assisting to pay a deserved tribute to the memory of one who has done so much for and deserves so much of his State and nation.

I am, madam, with great respect,

L. ROBINSON.

[From Governor S. J. Tilden, of New York.]

15 GRAMERCY PARK, NEW YORK,
June 1, 1878.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your invitation to be present at the unveiling of the monument to ex-President Andrew Johnson, at Greeneville, Tenn., on the 5th inst.

It would give me great pleasure to be present on that occasion if it were practicable, but engagements here preclude the possibility.

I appreciate highly the character of Andrew Johnson; his devotion to constitutional principles as they were practiced by Jefferson and by Jackson, and I sympathize with the homage which his fellow-citizens propose to pay to his memory.

Very truly, yours, SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

To the committee at the unveiling of the Johnson monument.

[From ex-Senator Vickers, of Maryland.]

CHESTERTOWN, MD., May 29, 1878.

An invitation was received to-day to attend the appropriate services accompanying the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of a great man and a true patriot. He was faithful to all his trusts, honest, and fearless.

The votes I gave to sustain him as Chief Magistrate I recur to with much satisfaction—they were conscientiously given, and I rejoiced in his triumph. I hope the Union he served to sustain will continue to exist as long as the beautiful monument erected to Andrew Johnson, ex-President of the United States, shall resist the encroachments of time.

My best wishes are extended to his family, and I regret that circumstances will debar me the pleasure of witnessing and participating in the interesting and beautiful services of the occasion.

With great respect, I am, sincerely, yours,

GEORGE VICKERS.

To the family of the late President Andrew Johnson.

[From Hon. D. S. Gooding, of Indiana.]

GREENFIELD, IND., June 1, 1878.

Mrs. PATTERSON:

Some time since I saw in a newspaper a statement that a monument will be erected to your father, ex-President Andrew Johnson, on the 5th of June. I had hoped that my business affairs would be in condition to permit my presence on that occasion, but I now find that it will be out of my power to be there. I very much desired to contribute at least my presence, expressive of the high esteem in which I hold the memory of ex-President Andrew Johnson as an honest and patriotic man of great ability, and a true friend. Not knowing the post-office address at this time of any of your father's family, I shall address this letter to you at Greeneville, Tenn., and assuring you and all the family of my deceased friend, including your husband, of my highest regard and pleasant remembrance of former kindness, I shall always take great pleasure in testifying to my knowledge of the many good qualities of your great father, now deceased, whose name will be more and more honored as time passes and history is just. Please say as much to all the family now surviving.

I am, yours, etc., DAVID S. GOODING.

[From ex-Senator Joseph S. Fowler.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 3, 1878.

Hon. D. T. PATTERSON.

DEAR SIR: I desire through you to thank all those who did me the honor to send me an invitation to attend the ceremonies of unveiling the monument erected to the memory of Andrew Johnson. It is a source of unfeigned regret that I am unable to attend. I sincerely hope that the occasion will call forth a pronounced expression in approbation of the services of one of the most illustrious citizens of the Republic.

The State of Tennessee is rich in distinguished service and illustrious memories which must never be neglected or forgotten. Every ceremony which repeats their virtues and devotion will recall the present generation to the contemplation of heroic patriotism and incorruptible integrity.

Before the brave and adventurous pioneers had expelled from her borders the stealthy and deadly tread of the savage, they were recalled to participate in the struggles of the Revolution. From that period to this her sons have freely poured out their blood in the defense of the Republic. Her wisdom, foresight, and patriotic devotion have been called into the councils of the nation and have taken the front rank. In every contest but one they have stood by the Republic. On this occasion she reluctantly threw her power against the nation. Under the guidance of Andrew Johnson she was the first to resume her place in the home of her fathers. It was from the inception to the close of this fearful struggle that this eminent citizen played the most conspicuous part and had the most marked influence upon the cause of national restoration and regeneration.

It will not be out of place to recall some of his cardinal principles in this period of national decadence. Among the most cherished were the inviolability of the popular will as expressed by the ballot; the prosperity of the people is the measure of national wealth, and not the treasury swelled by taxation; never distrust the good faith of the people; nothing is settled that is wrong; the people are capable of self-government, and will at last correct every political error; the sanctity and dignity of labor is above all other social and political interests.

Though this man's life was one continued storm and struggle against opposition, calumny, and envy, he lived to see the angry waves subside and the tempestuous ocean calm as the slumbering infant. He had witnessed the achievement of his cherished wishes. He had first spoken for the nation and opposed war. His counsels were unheard, and after an ocean of blood had been shed he conducted the revolted States back to their places in the Republic. He had returned to Tennessee, and by his generous magnanimity conquered his place in the affections of his fellow-citizens. He had been welcomed back to the Senate by the American people—to the spot of his proudest triumphs and bitterest agonies. He returned to his mountain home and died in the midst of the fortunate consummation of his long, anxious struggles. Happily he did not live to see the will of the people defeated by fraud and the National Executive chosen by an unauthorized commission against the solemn expression of the people at the ballot.

He entered public life when political antagonisms had centered in political chiefs. The contest was fierce and personal, though involving only questions of a transient character. Gradually the conflict widened and deepened into one of civilizations emanating from sections formed on geographical lines. In his course he had been a diligent student of the Constitution, and his intense admiration of that expression of civil government grew into an enthusiastic reverence. To this chart he turned with pious veneration through all the angry and exasperating contests that were rapidly generating the fearful conflict of arms. Amidst all the long and dreary agony that followed he turned devoutly to the fountain of his faith and hope for guidance. When the hour of reconciliation had arrived, when the cry of an exhausted people for peace was uttered to the heavens, he again turned to the ever-living fountain of light for the principles which should direct his steps to restoring the shattered and disordered Republic. The events that have followed reconstruction have attested his wisdom and foresight, and have claimed for him new titles to the reverence of the American people. I shall not now, over his ashes, enter into any comparisons. They force themselves unwillingly upon the public mind, and have silenced every murmur against his patriotic and upright administration of the Government. It has been a source of wonder to see how rapidly the waves of partisan resentment have subsided into tranquil approval. Every year attests the value of his jealous regard for the provisions of the Federal Constitution and his disposition to win the confidence of the prostrate section of his country.

Throughout his political life he was no friend of the sword. He used it only in extreme emergencies and renounced it upon the first gleam of peace. He relied upon generous and impartial justice, upon the influence of an exalted charity and the magnetic power of a noble and patriotic love to cement again the bonds of union and give assurance that the Republic was again the home of all her children.

I will not longer detain you on his merits. They will, from that beautiful mount in which his ashes repose, be portrayed by a life-long friend and companion who was endeared to him by all the ties of a common faith, personal friendship, disinterested and patriotic services, and common struggles for what they righteously believed vital to the interests of the nation and her people. I am happy to know that one who will do justice to his motives and his actions has been chosen for the service. I feel profoundly grateful that "heaven has bountifully lengthened his days" for this pious service. Again, by a faithful and sincere heart will the blessings and dangers of free institutions be pressed home upon the public conscience.

With the warmest assurance of regard and esteem,

I am, as ever, your friend, JOS. S. FOWLER.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on Immigration the bill S. 4403, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate immigration of aliens into the United States."

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman what the purpose of this is?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Simply this: The committee has adopted a large number of amendments already and probably will adopt more at the meeting to-morrow. Now, if this bill comes before the House in its present form it will be exceedingly difficult for Members to follow it on account of the large number of committee amendments. In connection with the report I prepared when I submitted this report of S. 4403 I had a comparative statement of the changes that it would make in the existing law, and I want to get out a new report.

Mr. FINLEY. Would not a reprint of the bill answer every purpose without recommitting it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think not, for the reason that we have adopted twenty or more amendments.

Mr. FINLEY. Would not a reprint of the bill with the amendments inserted be sufficient?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; we can not reprint a bill which is separate from a report because the bill is not before the committee. All we could do would be to offer the amendments on the floor of the House, in which case it would be very difficult to follow it.

Mr. FINLEY. Is the gentleman assured that the bill will be promptly reported back to the House?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am assured that I will make every effort to have it reported back at once, and I have almost the unanimous support of the members of the committee, with the possible exception of one, and I think every member on the gentleman's side.

Mr. FINLEY. How soon could the bill be reported back?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Just as soon as we can pass upon the amendments and get them in shape. They are all in my pocket now, and we have a meeting to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman how much land there is in this lot.

Mr. NEEDHAM. About an acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. There are dams above and below the proposed dam, are there not?

Mr. BUCKMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Dams have been established for some years, some of them?

PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4698.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4698) for the preservation of American antiquities.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall appropriate, excavate, injure, or destroy any historic or prehistoric ruin or monument, or any object of antiquity, situated on lands owned or controlled by the Government of the United States, without the permission of the Secretary of the Department of the Government having jurisdiction over the lands on which said antiquities are situated, shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not more than $500 or be imprisoned for a period of not more than ninety days, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to declare by public proclamation historic landmarks, historic and prehistoric structures, and other objects of historic or scientific interest that are situated upon the lands owned or controlled by the Government of the United States to be national monuments, and may reserve as a part thereof parcels of land, the limits of which in all cases shall be confined to the smallest area compatible with the proper care and management of the objects to be protected: Provided, That when such objects are situated upon a tract covered by a bona fide unperfected claim or held in private ownership, the tract, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the proper care and management of the object, may be relinquished to the Government, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept the relinquishment of such tracts in behalf of the Government of the United States.

SEC. 3. That permits for the examination of ruins, the excavation of archæological sites, and the gathering of objects of antiquity upon the lands under their respective jurisdictions may be granted by the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, and War to institutions which they may deem properly qualified to conduct such examination, excavation, or gathering, subject to such rules and regulations as they may prescribe: Provided, That the examinations, excavations, and gatherings are undertaken for the benefit of reputable museums, universities, colleges, or other recognized scientific or educational institutions, with a view to increasing the knowledge of such objects, and that the gatherings shall be made for permanent preservation in public museums.

SEC. 4. That the Secretaries of the Departments aforesaid shall make and publish from time to time uniform rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman whether this applies to all the public lands or only certain reservations made in the bill?

Mr. LACEY. There is no reservation made in the bill of any specific spot.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the bill would be preferable if it covered a particular spot and did cover the entire public domain.

Mr. LACEY. There has been an effort made to have national parks in some of these regions, but this will merely make small reservations where the objects are of sufficient interest to preserve them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will that take this land off the market, or can they still be settled on as part of the public domain?

Mr. LACEY. It will take that portion of the reservation out of the market. It is meant to cover the cave dwellers and cliff dwellers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much land will be taken off the market in the Western States by the passage of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. Not very much. The bill provides that it shall be the smallest area necesstry for the care and maintenance of the objects to be preserved.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it be anything like the forest-reserve bill, by which seventy or eighty million acres of land in the United States have been tied up?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly not. The object is entirely different. It is to preserve these old objects of special interest and the Indian remains in the pueblos in the Southwest, whilst the other reserves the forests and the water courses.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that that bill was abused. I know of one place where in 5 miles square you could not get a cord of wood, and they call it a forest, and by such means they have locked up a very large area in this country.

Mr. LACEY. The next bill I desire to call up is a bill on which there is a conference report now on the Speaker's table, which permits the opening up of specified tracts of agricultural lands where they can be used, by which the very evil that my friend is protesting against can be remedied. It is House bill 17576, which has passed both bodies, and there is a conference report for concurrence as to one of the details upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will succeed in passing that bill, and this bill will not result in locking up other lands. I have no objection to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL LANDS WITHIN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 17567.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment with an amendment as follows, so as to read, in lieu of the Senate amendment and in lieu of the words stricken out, "except the following counties in the State of California: Inyo, Tulare, Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego;" and the House agree to the same.

JOHN F. LACEY,
S. C. SMITH,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOS. H. CARTER,
FRANK P. FLINT,
FRED T. DUBOIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT OF MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The bill as it passed the House applied to the forest reserves in all of the public-land States and Territories, with the exception of the State of California. As the bill passed the Senate the exception as to the State of California was stricken out.

As agreed upon by the conferees, the Senate amendment is so modified as to make the bill apply to the State of California, with the exception of the following counties: Inyo, Tulare, Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego.

There are portions of forest reserves within the counties above named. This bill will therefore not apply to lands in so much of the reserves as are situated in said counties.

JOHN F. LACEY,
S. C. SMITH,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOS. H. CARTER,
FRANK P. FLINT,
FRED T. DUBOIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Reclamation funds may be used to defray the necessary expenses of appraisement and sale, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

INSPECTION OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4299) to amend section 4421 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, inspection of steam vessels.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4421 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Upon such inspection and approval, the inspectors shall also make and subscribe a temporary certificate, which shall set forth substantially the fact of such inspection and approval, and shall deliver the same to the master or owner of the vessel, and shall keep a copy thereof on file in their office. The said temporary certificate shall be carried and exposed by vessels in the same manner as is provided in section 4423 for copies of the regular certificate, and the form thereof and the period during which it is to be in force shall be as prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, or the executive committee thereof, as provided in section 4405. And such temporary certificate, during such period and prior to the delivery to the master or owner of the copies of the regular certificate, shall take the place of, and be a substitute for, such copies of the regular certificate of inspection, as required by sections 4423, 4424, and 4426, and for the purposes of said sections, and shall also, during such period, be a substitute for the regular certificate of inspection as required by section 4498, and for the purposes of said section, until such regular certificate of inspection has been filed with the collector or other chief officer of customs. Such temporary certificate shall also be subject to revocation in the manner and under the conditions provided in section 4453. No vessel required to be inspected under the provisions of this title shall be navigated without having on board an unexpired regular certificate of inspection or such temporary certificate;" so that said section, when amended as above, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 4421. When the inspection of a steam vessel is completed and the inspectors approve the vessel and her equipment throughout, they shall make and subscribe a certificate to the collector or other chief officer of the customs of the district in which such inspection has been made, in accordance with the form and regulations prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors. Such certificate shall be verified by the oaths of inspectors signing it, before the chief officer of the customs of the district or any other person competent by law to administer oaths. If the inspectors refuse to grant a certificate of approval, they shall make a statement in writing, and sign the same, giving the reasons for their disapproval. Upon such inspection and approval the inspectors shall also make and subscribe a temporary certificate, which shall set forth substantially the fact of such inspection and approval, and shall deliver the same to the master or owner of the vessel, and shall keep a copy thereof on file in their office. The said temporary certificate shall be carried and exposed by vessels in the same manner as is provided in section 4423 for copies of the regular certificate, and the form thereof and the period during which it is to be in force shall be as prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, or the executive committee thereof, as provided in section 4405. And such temporary certificate, during such period and prior to the delivery to the master or owner of the copies of the regular certificate, shall take the place of, and be a substitute for, such copies of the regular certificate of inspection as required by sections 4423, 4424, and 4426, and for the purposes of said sections, and shall also, during such period, be a substitute for the regular certificate of inspection as required by section 4498 and for the purposes of said section until such regular certificate of inspection has been filed with the collector or other chief officer of customs. Such temporary certificate shall also be subject to revocation in the manner and under the conditions provided in section 4453. No vessel required to be inspected under the provisions of this title shall be navigated without having on board an unexpired regular certificate of inspection or such temporary certificate."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the two bills were passed was ordered to lie on the table.

BLOCK SIGNALS AND AUTOMATIC CONTROL OF RAILWAY TRAINS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 153, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and report on block signals and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report on the use of and necessity for block signals and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains in the United States. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to employ persons who are familiar with the subject, and may use such of its own employees as are necessary to make a thorough examination into the matter.

In transmitting its report to the Congress the Commission shall recommend such legislation as to the Commission seems advisable.

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Commission shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was agreed to:

In line 5, page 1, strike out the word "signals" and insert in lieu thereof the words "signal system."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an investigation of block signal systems, as well as appliances for the automatic control of railway trains. The object of the resolution is to gain experience and information both for the Congress and for progressive railway men. The block signal system is in use in many places and is fairly well known. But it is claimed that there are a number of automatic signal devices which are more nearly perfect as preventatives of accidents than the block signal. These automatic signal devices ought to be given an opportunity of fair trial under inspection of Government officials, who will report to Congress upon their merits unbiased by the wishes of the owners of the appliances who want them installed generally, or by the wishes of the railway officials who object to the expense of their installation.

The need of additional safeguards to prevent accidents on railways must be admitted when we consider the enormous loss of life and injury to persons, and especially to the railway employees, which the railways of our country cause each year. Railroading is nearly as hazardous in times of peace as being a soldier in time of war. Although Congress has provided for air brakes, automatic couplers, and various other safety appliances, the installation of which has been proceeding during the last few years, yet notwithstanding this the percentage of railroad employees injured to those employed has been steadily increasing.

We have recently passed an employers' liability act, so far as the railroads are concerned. This may have some tendency toward compelling railroads to be more careful in the selection of employees, and it is at least a recognition of common sense in dealing with the matter of injuries caused by railroad accidents.

Whether Congress shall require the use of one particular kind of signal or device or whether it shall lay down certain rules, permitting a discrimination in the kind and character of the signal or device to be used, may be a question. We have no desire to confer a special benefit upon the owner of a patented device. On the other hand, there ought, as far as practicable, to be certain methods in universal use, or nearly so, on the railroads of the country. It is, however, quite certain that there must be a distinction drawn between roads in populous districts, running a large number of trains each day, with stations close together, and roads which have few trains, few stations, and in sparsely settled communities. I do not think Congress possesses sufficient information to intelligently legislate on the subject to-day, but it seems to me that the Government can properly make investigation. My observation is that much of the legislation enacted is found faulty because not sufficiently considered and because acted upon without sufficient information. Few of us know much; none of us know all. We can not learn too much.

The Commission, including its very efficient secretary, Mr. Edward A. Moseley, have already given considerable attention to this subject, and by the passage of the pending resolution it is hoped that a report and recommendations may be made to Congress which will be of great value to us.

BLOCK SIGNALS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

In Great Britain the block system is universal. The matter is under the control of the board of trade, which compels railroads to use "the requisite apparatus for providing by means of the block telegraph system an adequate interval of space between following trains and, in the case of junctions, between converging or crossing trains." This applies to double-track roads. On single lines the train staff or tablet system is required, under rules specified by the board.

For single-track roads the electric staff and tablet system is perfect in point of protection. The track to be protected is divided into blocks or sections of such length as to best accommodate traffic conditions, the blocks usually terminating at existing stations or telegraph offices. Each section is controlled by two instruments, one at each end, and each instrument is equipped with a sufficient number of staffs to take care of the traffic conditions. No train is permitted to pass over one of these sections in either direction unless the conductor or engineer has in his possession one of these staffs. The staff really takes the place of a telegraph train order.

In moving a train from A to B, for instance, the operator at A presses a bell knob in his staff instrument, which rings a bell in the instrument at B. The operator at B then answers by pressing a similar button on his instrument, which rings a bell in the instrument at A and at the same time furnishes an electric current which unlocks the staff mechanism in the instrument at A and enables the operator there to withdraw a staff. Immediately on withdrawing the staff the operator at A once more presses his bell knob, which indicates to the operator at B that the operation is completed. The operation is visually shown by letters and indicators on the instruments, which are actuated by pressing the buttons. When a staff is withdrawn both instruments are electrically locked, and another staff can not be withdrawn from either instrument until a staff is returned to it.

The staff being withdrawn it is delivered to the train desiring to go to B, whereupon it proceeds on its way secure in the knowledge that it is the sole possessor of that section of track. On arrival at B the staff is delivered to the operator and another one is obtained which has already been withdrawn from the instrument controlling the block from B to C. The train then proceeds to C and the operator at B returns the staff given him to the instrument controlling the block from A to B, which unlocks the instrument at A, allowing another staff to be withdrawn whenever it is desired to send another train through the block from A to B.

This is an absolute block, allowing but one train in any section. This is the ideal arrangement, yet cases do occur where it is desirable to allow several trains to follow each other into the block at short intervals, in which case an attachment to the absolute machine is furnished, known as a "permissive staff." The removal of the absolute staff, which is carried through the block by the first train, unlocks the permissive-staff receptacle and allows it to be withdrawn. The permissive staff is a steel rod having eleven removable rings, any one of which authorizes a train to pass through a section. If less than twelve trains are to follow each other the last one takes all the remaining rings and the steel rod. When all the rings and the rod are received at the opposite end of the section the operator reassembles them into the complete permissive staff, which he then places in the permissive-staff receptacle. When the permissive staff is replaced in the machine it unlocks the receptacle in which the absolute staff belongs and the absolute staff can only then be replaced in the machine, unlocking the instrument at A, so as to allow another staff to be withdrawn. Thus it will be seen that in no case can two trains moving in opposite directions occupy a block at the same time, and only under well-defined restrictions can two or more trains moving in the same direction occupy a block at the same time.

The principal objection raised against the block system is the matter of cost. In this connection the following extract from an address to the directors of the Great Eastern Railway by Lord Claude Hamilton, president of the company, at the last annual meeting of the directors, makes good reading:

> With regard to the block system and the interlocking of points from signal boxes many of us find fault, and I think sometimes justly so, with the board of trade, instigated by Parliament, imposing various obligations upon us. Some of these obligations, to my mind, are unnecessary or vexatious, and they add enormously to the expense of working a railway; but I am bound to say that when, twenty or twenty-five years ago, the board of trade imposed upon the railway companies of the United Kingdom the obligation of establishing a total block system and interlocking of points from signal boxes they did a thing which was of inestimable value, not only to the traveling public, but to the railway companies themselves. I recollect well when we received notice from the board of trade—and it was in those days when our finances were not in quite a flourishing condition—that we must adopt this system over the whole of the Great Eastern Railway, and I think the estimate of cost entailed upon us was certainly over a million sterling. We did not know where to look for the money; we thought at the time it was an unnecessary obligation. We got the board of trade, owing to our financial condition, to postpone their requirements, if I remember right, for some three years; but at last the work was carried out. If it had not been for that, how impossible it would have been for us to improve our seaside resorts by the fast service which we now run, and to have carried the enormous number of people that we do with comparative immunity from loss of life. Of course, in the last two years we have had two accidents, the one at Hackney Downs and the other at Brentwood; but, with the exception for these two, we have carried our passengers with great immunity from loss of life for many years past. I always think, when one finds fault with the board of trade for some of their requirements, it is only just and right, in a matter of that kind, we should bear testimony to their foresight in forcing our companies to adopt this system, and the sooner our friends in America follow suit it will be best for their system and those who use their trains.

Mr. Edward Bates Dorsey, C. E., member of the American Society C. C. and the American Institute M. E., in speaking of the English system at a meeting of the American Society of Civil Engineers, said:

> It is astonishing to see the blind faith the English engine driver places in his block signals. In dense fogs, where he can not see 100 feet ahead, or dark nights when his vision is also very limited, for his headlight is only an ordinary lantern, useless for illuminating the track and only used as a signal, the same as a tail light, or frequently when he has both the dark night and the dense fog to run through, he runs at full speed and generally on schedule time, feeling sure that he is perfectly safe because his block signals have told him so, and they can not make a mistake or lie. The underground railroad in London and the London suburban railroads afford a fine illustration of this system. Notwithstanding the proverbial London fogs, these roads run their trains, probably several thousand daily, upon schedule time and with a headway varying from three to three and a half minutes. And this is done without accident or delay.
> The English Government, through the board of trade, obliges all English railroads to adopt the block system and run their trains by it, and we should follow their example. The officers of a railroad should be tried and convicted of premeditated murder in all cases of fatal accidents on their road that could have been avoided by the block system. It is no excuse for them to say that it does not answer, for it does answer perfectly in England and other European countries. The officers controlling the roads ought to be made to feel that it is cheaper and safer to properly equip the road by using the block system than to kill or maim passengers by not doing so.

BLOCK SYSTEM IN UNITED STATES.

The block system is now in use on about 40,000 miles of railroad in the United States. This does not necessarily mean that every train in this 40,000 miles is protected by a space interval, which is the fundamental principle of the block system. For instance, the block system is said to be in use on about 6,000 miles of the Southern Railway, but this is only for passenger trains running in the same direction. Its only effect, therefore, is to protect passenger trains against rear collisions. It does not guard against butting collisions, nor is it applicable to freight trains. The extent of track in this country on which a complete block system is in operation is very limited. The Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific Railway is the best example of single-track blocking in the country, and has the distinction of being the only single-track railroad in the world with the automatic electric block signal system in use from terminal to terminal.

It is the testimony of the officials of this company that the capacity of the track has been greatly increased by means of the perfect system of block signals in use. Speaking recently of the system in use on his road, Mr. H. M. Waite, superintendent of the road, said:

> The question is asked, "Is it worth the expense?" Unfortunately we can not say how many dollars the signals have actually saved—no one can; but considering the old stories of three collisions a day, and now none, and the actual experience of trains saved from collisions, etc., we believe the money is well spent; and we are spending more every day for new installations and improvements in the old.

This road also uses the electric train staff in certain places and for certain operations, such as gauntlets through tunnels or over bridges or between double tracks. They operate the staff on the single-track bridge over the Ohio River, for instance. This is a gauntlet between two yards, with 100 train movements in twenty-four hours, and not a single train order is sent. For such places as this the staff is unequaled for dispatch, and as near perfect for safety as can be had, but for high speed the system is cumbersome, when it comes to picking up and delivering the staff.

The staff system is also in use to a limited extent and for special situations on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Philadelphia and Reading, Chicago and Alton, Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe, Chesapeake and Ohio, and Southern. The Union Switch and Signal Company have devised an appliance whereby it is claimed the staff may be picked up and delivered with perfect certainty and safety at a speed of 60 or 70 miles an hour, and it was stated some months ago that this company had a contract for installing the staff system on 110 miles of track between Rockland and Truckee, Nev., on the Southern Pacific, which will undoubtedly be the longest stretch of track operated by the staff system in the United States.

A full inquiry into the progress and development of the block system in this country, such as is contemplated by the resolution, is much to be desired, not alone for the purpose of furnishing Congress with information that will enable it to legislate intelligently upon the subject of block signals, but to exhibit the varying practices and principles in use on different roads and lead to a uniform and effective code of rules for the entire country. An elaborate arrangement of signals does not necessarily mean that the road on which they are found is well or even decently protected; on the other hand, a very simple signal arrangement may accompany a complete and effective system of blocking. It all depends upon the principles or rules under which the signals are operated. In Great Britain there is a standard code of rules established and approved by the board of trade, which all companies must adhere to. In this country each road makes its own rules and modifies or annuls them to suit its own convenience whenever it sees fit to do so.

That the train dispatcher and telegraph train-order system of train operation can no longer be safely relied upon to move the enormous and constantly increasing traffic of American railroads is recognized by railroad men of experience, and our best roads are installing the block system as rapidly as possible. But there are always laggards, roads that will spend no money for anything of this kind until they are forced to do so. They had to be forced in line by means of legislation on the matter of safety appliances, and it will undoubtedly be the same on the matter of block signals.

The purpose of the joint resolution is to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and report on the use and necessity for block-signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains in the United States and to recommend to Congress such legislation as the Interstate Commerce Commission may deem advisable after making such investigation.

MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENT.

In his annual message sent to the Congress at the beginning of the present session in December last President Roosevelt said:

In my annual message to the Fifty-eighth Congress at its third session I called attention to the necessity for legislation requiring the use of block signals upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce. The number of serious collisions upon unblocked roads that have occurred within the past year adds force to the recommendation then made. The Congress should provide, by appropriate legislation, for the introduction of block signals upon all railroads engaged in interstate commerce at the earliest practicable date as a measure of increased safety to the traveling public.

In his annual message to the Congress, in December, 1904, the President said:

The ever-increasing casualty list upon our railroads is a matter of grave public concern and urgently calls for action by the Congress. In the matter of speed and comfort of railway travel our railroads give at least as good service as those of any other nation, and there is no reason why this service should not also be as safe as human ingenuity can make it. Many of our leading roads have been foremost in the adoption of the most approved safeguards for the protection of travelers and employees, yet the list of clearly avoidable accidents continues unduly large. The passage of a law requiring the adoption of a block-signal system has been proposed to the Congress. I earnestly concur in that recommendation. * * * Of course nothing can ever prevent accidents caused by human weakness or misconduct, and there should be drastic punishment for any railroad employee, whether officer or man, who by issuance of wrong orders or by disobedience of orders causes disaster.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION REPORT.

In its annual report submitted to Congress in December, 1904, the Interstate Commerce Commission said:

For the prevention of collisions we are bound to urge, with added emphasis, if possible, the same means recommended in our last annual report, namely, the adoption of the block system. * * *

Considered strictly on its technical merits, the block system is the acme of simplicity. As was shown in connection with the proposed statute submitted with our last annual report, it is simply the embodiment of the theory that no train shall ever be started from any point on any main-line track until it is known that such track is clear of all other trains up to a certain point beyond—in other words, the theory that a space interval must always be maintained and no dependence placed on the maintenance of time intervals at stations. In the absence of this knowledge of a clear line for a definite distance we have many uncertainties, mistakes in reading time, failures of timepieces, miscalculations of speed, neglect, sleepiness or laziness of flagmen, and the numberless other faults so familiar to those who read the collision records. The block system cures these faults and prevents rear collisions.

On single-track lines, where the liability to butting collisions is a danger even greater than of rear collisions, the block system does away with another class of errors which, unless we have space-interval regulations, is harder to deal with even than those just mentioned, such as forgetting telegraphic orders and careless reading of poor handwriting on the part of trainmen, forgetting to deliver orders, or confusing different orders on the part of telegraph operators, and mistakes of dispatchers in keeping their record of trains.

In the same report the Commission said:

As to automatic versus nonautomatic signaling the question is mainly one of immediate capital expenditure. The automatic method necessitates the construction and installation of costly apparatus, but is less costly in operation than the nonautomatic or manual.

ACCIDENT BULLETINS.

By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, it was made the duty of railroad officials to present to the Interstate Commerce Commission monthly reports of all collisions of trains and of all accidents to trains leaving the tracks, as well as accidents occurring to passengers or employees, with a statement of the nature and causes of the accidents and the circumstances connected therewith. This law has resulted in the publication every three months of accident bulletins by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which have been of value in studying the causes of railway accidents.

ACCIDENTS IN OCTOBER, NOVEMBER, AND DECEMBER, 1905.

From Accident Bulletin No. 18, reporting the railroad accidents during the months of October, November, and December, 1905, it appears that during those three months 1,109 passengers and employees were killed, and 17,118 were injured by railway accidents in the United States.

Of the 1,109 killed 1,008 were railway employees, 82 were passengers, and 19 were persons carried under agreement or contract, such as postal clerks, express messengers, etc. Of the 17,118 injured, 14,250 were railway employees, 2,599 were passengers, and 269 were persons carried under agreement or contract. Of the 1,109 passengers and employees killed, 320 were killed in train accidents. Of the 17,118 injured, 3,797 were injured in train accidents. Of the 320 killed in train accidents, 186 were killed in collisions. Of the 3,797 injured in train accidents, 2,177 were injured in collisions. Of the 186 killed in collisions, 155 were railway employees, 23 were passengers, and 8 were persons carried under agreement or contract. Of the 2,177 injured in collisions, 1,107 were railway employees, 970 were passengers, and 100 were persons carried under agreement or contract. Of the 186 killed in collisions, 60 were killed in rear collisions, 74 in butting collisions, 3 in collisions caused by trains separating, and 49 in collisions classed as "miscellaneous." Of the 2,177 injured in collisions, 736 were injured in rear collisions, 685 in butting collisions, 98 in collisions caused by trains separating, and 658 in collisions classed as "miscellaneous."

The total number of collisions occurring during the three months was 2,077, of which 267 affected passenger trains. Of the 2,077 collisions, 538 were rear collisions, 231 butting collisions, 294 were collisions caused by trains separating, and 1,014 collisions classed as "miscellaneous." The total damage to cars, engines, and roadway by these collisions is reported at $1,553,085.

It appears from this report that out of the very large number of passengers and employees killed, to wit, 1,109, and injured, to wit, 17,118, during the three months, only 23 passengers were killed, and 970 injured in collisions.

INCREASE IN ACCIDENTS, 1894 TO 1904.

For the year ending June 30, 1894, the total number of persons killed on the railroads in the United States was 6,447, The total number of injured was 31,889. Of the persons killed, 1,823 were employees, 324 were passengers, and 4,300 are classified as "other persons, most of whom were trespassers."

For the year ending June 30, 1904, the total number of persons killed was 10,046; injured, 84,155. Of those killed, 3,632 were employees, 441 were passengers, and 5,973 were classified as "other persons." The number of employees killed increased from 1,823 in 1894 to 3,632 in 1904, and the number injured increased from 23,422 in 1894 to 67,067 in 1904. The number of passengers killed increased from 324 in 1894 to 441 in 1904, and the number injured increased from 3,034 in 1894 to 9,111 in 1904. In 1894, 1 railway employee out of every 428 was killed; in 1904, 1 out of every 357 was killed. In 1894, 1 railway employee out of every 33 was injured; in 1904, 1 out of every 19 was injured. In 1894, 1 trainman out of every 156 was killed; in 1904, 1 out of every 120 was killed. In 1894, 1 trainman out of every 12 was injured; in 1904, 1 out of every 9 was injured. In 1894, 1 passenger out of every 1,668,791 was killed; in 1904, 1 out of every 1,622,267 was killed. In 1894, 1 passenger out of every 178,210 was injured; in 1904, 1 out of every 78,523 was injured.

The following tables give the data on these points in 1894 to 1904:

Notwithstanding the fact that the safety appliance act has caused a great increase in the number of cars equipped with air brakes, automatic couplers, and other safety appliances during these years, the tables above given show not only a great actual increase in the number of persons killed and injured by the railways, but also a great comparative increase in comparison with the number of employees and the number of passengers. This increase of killed and injured contemporaneously with the increase of safety appliances is certainly not to be charged to the use of the safety appliances, but must be explained by other causes. Whatever may be the causes for the increase in the percentage of persons killed and injured, the fact challenges attention and demands investigation.

For the year ending June 30, 1902, one passenger was killed for every 57,072,283 carried 1 mile; for the year ending June 30, 1903, one was killed for every 58,917,645 carried 1 mile, while for the year ending June 30, 1904, one was killed for every 49,712,502 carried 1 mile.

ACCIDENTS IN ENGLAND AND UNITED STATES COMPARED.

A comparison of the number of persons killed and injured in the working of railways by accidents in the United States for the year ending June 30, 1904, and in the United Kingdom (Great Britain and Ireland) for the calendar year 1904, shows there were in those years, respectively, 10,046 persons killed in the United States as against 1,073 in the United Kingdom, and there were injured 84,155 in the United States as against 18,802 in the United Kingdom. The number of passengers killed in the United States was 441; in the United Kingdom, 127; passengers injured in the United States, 9,111; in the United Kingdom, 3,487. The number of passengers killed because of collisions and derailments in the United States was 262; in the United Kingdom, 6; the number injured in the United States was 4,978; in the United Kingdom, 521. The number of train men killed in consequence of collisions and derailments in the United States was 613; in the United Kingdom, 6; the number of injured from the same cause in the United States was 4,337; in the United Kingdom, 99.

A comparison of the three months' period of July, August, and September, 1905, shows that passengers and employees were killed in the United States to the number of 1,053; in the United Kingdom, 210. Injured in the United States, 16,386; in the United Kingdom, 4,305. During this period passengers were killed to the number of 99 in the United States, 66 in the United Kingdom; injured, 2,904 in the United States, 962 in the United Kingdom. During the same period the number of passengers killed in train accidents was 31 in the United States and 31 in the United Kingdom; injured, 1,653 in the United States, 215 in the United Kingdom. Of the passengers killed during this period 15 in the United States and 21 in the United Kingdom were killed in train collisions and 952 in the United States and 135 in the United Kingdom were injured in train collisions. During the same three months there were 1,605 train collisions in the United States and 103 in the United Kingdom.

During the three months' period of April, May, and June, 1905, passengers and employees were killed to the number of 886 in the United States and 130 in the United Kingdom; injured in the United States, 13,783; in the United Kingdom, 3,922. In the same period 82 passengers were killed in the United States and in the United Kingdom 27; 2,163 passengers were injured in the United States and 658 in the United Kingdom. In the United States 5 and in the United Kingdom 2 passengers were killed by train collisions; in the United States 549 and in the United Kingdom 34 passengers were injured by train collisions.

A comparison of the three months' period, January, February, and March, 1905, shows that passenger and railway employees were killed in the United States to the number of 909, in the United Kingdom to the number of 114; injured in the United States, 14,397; in the United Kingdom, 1,526. During this period passengers were killed to the number of 64 in the United States, 29 in the United Kingdom. The number of passengers killed in train accidents was 28 in the United States and 5 in the United Kingdom; injured, 1,651 in the United States, 90 in the United Kingdom. Of the passengers killed, 18 in the United States and 5 in the United Kingdom were killed in train collisions, and 834 in the United States and 86 in the United Kingdom were injured in train collisions. During the same three months there were 1,787 collisions in the United States, in the United Kingdom, 96, including trains running through gates, etc.

RAILWAY GROUPS IN UNITED STATES.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has, for statistical purposes, divided the railroads of the United States into various territorial groups.

While these groups are not wholly arranged by State lines, and in a number of cases portions of States are put in different groups in accordance with natural railroad divisions, yet, roughly speaking, the groups may be said to be composed as follows:

Group 1: New England States.

Group 2: New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Maryland.

Group 3: Ohio, Indiana, Michigan.

Group 4: Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina.

Group 5: Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi.

Group 6: Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and those portions of Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota north and east of the Missouri River.

Group 7: Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, and parts of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Colorado.

Group 8: Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Kansas, and parts of Missouri, Colorado, New Mexico.

Group 9: Texas, part of New Mexico.

Group 10: Washington, Oregon, Idaho, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, part of New Mexico.

DANGER OF TRAVEL NOT GREAT.

It is not easy to make just comparisons of accidents or the probability of accidents. It is unfortunate that the statistical work of the Interstate Commerce Commission has not been more thorough and complete, both in the collection, arrangement, and comparison of the statistics relating to railway accidents. The publication of the fact that in a given year (year ending June 30, 1904) 10,046 persons were killed and 84,155 were injured in railway accidents is enough to make a contemplating traveler have cold shivers; but when it is ascertained that in that year only 262 passengers were killed and 4,978 were injured by collisions and derailments in the whole United States, the danger of travel does not seem so great.

ACCIDENTS AND MILEAGE IN GREAT BRITAIN AND GROUPS IN UNITED STATES COMPARED.

It is frequently asserted and generally believed that railway accidents are much more common in the United States than in Great Britain. A comparison of the statistics of the two countries is interesting, and an analytical and thorough comparison would undoubtedly be of considerable value. Too much stress should not be laid upon any of the comparisons made in this report, for the reason that statistics of accidents for particular years lose much of their value unless compared with the average for a long series of years. However, most of the statistics referred to in this report are of nearly fair average value and in general may be relied upon as furnishing a fair comparison one set with another.

The length of railways in the United Kingdom (Great Britain and Ireland) at the end of the calendar year 1904 was 22,600 miles. Much of this was double track. The length of 1904, was 212,243, most of which was single track. The railway length in the United States was nearly ten times as great as in the United Kingdom. The number of persons killed in the United States was 10,046, in the United Kingdom 1,158; the number injured in the United States was 84,155, in the United Kingdom 18,802. The number killed and the number injured in the United Kingdom were greater per mile than in the United States.

If we compare the New England railroads with those of the United Kingdom we find that New England had a railway length of 8,063 miles, more than one-third the length in the United Kingdom. The number of passengers killed in group 1 (New England) in train and vehicle movements was 8, in the United Kingdom 115; the number injured in group 1 was 210, in the United Kingdom 2,669.

In group 2 (comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland) the railway length was 23,022 miles. The number of passengers killed in train and vehicle movements was 113, as compared with 115 in the United Kingdom; the number injured was 2,173 in group 2, as compared with 2,669 in the United Kingdom.

In group 3 (comprising Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan) the railway length was 24,957, which was greater than the length in the United Kingdom. The number of passengers killed in group 3 in train and vehicle movements was 73, as against 115 in the United Kingdom; the number injured in group 3 was 1,183, as against 2,669 in the United Kingdom.

Group 6 comprises Illinios, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and parts of Missouri, North Dakota, and South Dakota, and has a railway length of 47,597 miles, more than twice as great a length as the United Kingdom. The number of passengers killed in group 6 in train and vehicle movements was 64 and the number injured 1,627, a far less number than was killed and injured in the United Kingdom.

But while the total number of passengers killed in the United States was less in proportion to railway length than in the United Kingdom, yet the proportion killed and injured by collisions and derailments was considerably greater.

It should be remembered also that more than one-half of the persons killed by railway accidents in the United States are trespassers who have no right to be upon the tracks, and that this condition is caused by the enormous railway mileage where it is at present practically impossible to prevent public access to the tracks.

An examination of the statistics of railway accidents in the United States tends toward the conclusion that accidents are proportionately more numerous in those portions of the country where the roads are mainly single track. Doubt is thrown upon such a conclusion, however, by the fact that the largest percentage of employees killed and injured in the movement of trains and railway vehicles per mile of track is in group 2. With a mileage slightly in excess of the mileage in the United Kingdom, the number of employees killed and injured in the movement of trains and railway vehicles in this group was 952 killed and 9,222 injured, as compared with 416 killed and 3,921 injured in the United Kingdom.

For the year ending June 30, 1904, 1,622,267 passengers were carried in the United States for each 1 mile. In the New England States 15,080,587 were carried for each 1 mile. In Group 2, 2,351,030 were carried for each 1 mile. In Group 4 (comprising Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina), only 571,767 passengers were carried for each one killed. In this group in 1903, 702,518 passengers were carried for each one killed.

But the number of passengers carried for each one killed is far greater for a series of years in New England than in any other portion of the United States, and on the average a much larger number of passengers were carried for one killed where the community is thickly settled and the passenger traffic heavy than in the more sparsely settled communities or where the passenger traffic is much lighter.

Bearing this fact in mind, and deducting the much larger number of trespassers killed here than in Great Britain, the statistics would seem to indicate that the railways in the United Kingdom are as dangerous to life and limb as those in the United States.

An examination and comparison of the statistics of the two countries, however, apparently indicate that more persons in proportion are killed in the United Kingdom because of the character of construction of the railway carriages or coaches than in the United States, while a considerably larger proportion seems to have been killed in the United States by reason of collisions of trains or derailments than in the United Kingdom.

DANGER TO EMPLOYEES.

A most casual examination of the statistics of both countries shows how enormously dangerous is the occupation of railroading.

There were 3,662 employees killed on the railroads in the United States during the year ending June 30, 1904. In the same period there were 67,067 injured. Three thousand four hundred and sixteen employees were killed in connection with the movement of trains and other railway vehicles and 36,413 were injured in the same connection. Seven hundred and twenty-three employees were killed and 5,329 were injured by collisions and derailments in the same year. The number of railway employees killed and injured each year constitutes an army, and is about as great as the entire army of the United States as it now exists.

In the opinion of the committee it is important that a thorough examination be instituted for the purpose of discovering what further devices and appliances can be adopted within reasonable limits of cost which will tend to make the occupation of railroading less hazardous and travel by the public less dangerous.

WHARVES, PIERS, ETC., IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin presents a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of waters in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, line 24, after "Secretary of War," as follows: "Provided, however, That vessels having contracts with the Government of the United States for carrying the mails may, with the consent of the owner of said structure and under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, be given a preference to expedite the landing and discharge of their cargoes at said structure."

That the House recede from its disagreement to all other amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER,
WM. T. ZENOR,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.
J. B. FORAKER,
GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
S. R. MALLORY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT OF MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill (H. R. 18502) entitled "An act to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto," state that the House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1, inserting on page 2, line 13, after the word "or" at the end of the line, the words "with the approval of the Secretary of War."

The bill as it passed the House provided that either the Government of the United States or the government of Porto Rico should have the right, after the expiration of thirty years, to take any structure built under the provisions of the act after paying the value of the same, etc. The amendment simply inserts the words "with the approval of the Secretary of War," so that as amended the act provides "that the Government of the United States, or, with the approval of the Secretary of War, the government of Porto Rico, shall have the right at any time after the expiration of thirty years from the date of such authorization, and after three months' notice, to take any such structure from the owner thereof upon paying the value of the same at the time it shall be so taken," etc.

The House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 2, inserting on page 2, line 22, after the words "Porto Rico," the words "exercising the right of purchase, as aforesaid." This is a verbal amendment which simply makes clearer the intent of the original bill.

The House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 3, inserting on page 3, line 1, before the word "Government," the words "Secretary of War for the." The original bill provided for the appointment of a board of four members, two of whom should be appointed by the Government of the United States, etc. This amendment simply provides that the Secretary of War shall act for the Government of the United States in making such appointments.

The House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 4, inserting on page 3, line 2, after the word "or," the words "by the governor of Porto Rico for." The original bill provides for the appointment of a board, two of whom might be appointed by the government of Porto Rico. This amendment simply provides that these appointments shall be made by the governor of Porto Rico for the government of Porto Rico.

The House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 5, inserting on page 3, line 2, after the words "Porto Rico," the words "as the case may be." This is a mere verbal amendment making clearer the intent of the original bill.

The Senate receded from its amendment No. 6, inserting on page 4, line 2, after the words "Secretary of War," at the end of paragraph (c), the following proviso: "Provided, however, That vessels having contracts with the Government of the United States for carrying the mail may, with the consent of the owner of said structure and under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, be given a preference to expedite the landing and discharge of their cargoes at said structure."

The amendments agreed upon do not at all change the effect of the bill as it passed the House, but only make clearer its meaning.

HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER,
WM. T. ZENOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COURT, DAYTON, OHIO.

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18854) providing for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern district of Ohio at the city of Dayton, in said district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act there shall be held at the city of Dayton, in the southern district of Ohio, a term of both the circuit and district courts of said district on the first Monday in May and November of each year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

COST OF ARMOR PLATE.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report upon House resolution 528, a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the following privileged resolution.

Mr. FOSS. I call for the reading of the resolution and also the report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives all information secured by him in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1905, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for other purposes," requiring the Secretary of the Navy to make a thorough inquiry as to the cost of armor plate and armor plant, and further requiring a report of such inquiry to be made to Congress, and that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, further requested to inform the House of Representatives of the extent of the inquiry made by him or the Navy Department under said requirement.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 528, after a careful consideration of the same, report it back and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. FOSS. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EUCLID STREET, MERIDIAN HILL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2623) for the extension of Euclid street, in Meridan Hill, District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to know whether there are any charges imposed on the Federal Government by this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The bill contemplates no charge whatever on either the District or the General Government. The whole expense of the proceeding is to be charged as benefits to the property affected.

Mr. KEIFER. There is so much noise we could not hear the statement of the gentleman. I desire to know whether there is any general law in the District of Columbia for the condemnation of private property, or whether it is necessary in every case, as this would seem to indicate, that we should pass a long bill in order to enact it into law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill that has been on the Speaker's table for some time. Since the bill came over from the Senate the Committee on the District of Columbia have agreed upon a much shorter form, and the bill providing for that form is now on the Calendar and will be used hereafter in cases of this kind.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it possible that hitherto we have always had to pass a long special act?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a remarkable commentary upon the legislation of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Is this by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection, but I desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I consented that this bill might be considered and passed for the reason that the bill provides that all damages are to be assessed against the abutting and adjacent property owners, and that no charge shall be made against the District of Columbia or the Government of the United States. I was so particular about that matter that a gentleman who is well known to every Member of the House stated to me, and in addition wrote me a letter, that every property owner that would be affected agreed to this matter. I now read that letter:

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill S. 7099, to amend section 2871 of the Revised Statutes, and that the same be considered at this time.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to amend section 2871 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2871 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2871. Upon arrival at any port in the United States of a steamship from a foreign port or place, or upon the arrival of a steamship from another port in the United States belonging to a line designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a common carrier of bonded merchandise, the collector of customs, with the concurrence of the naval officer, where there is one, upon or after the issuing of a general order, shall grant, upon proper application therefor, a special license to unlade the cargo of said vessel at night—that is to say, between sunset and sunrise; but before any such special license is granted the master, agents, or consignees of the vessel shall execute and deliver to the collector a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by him, conditioned to indemnity and save the collector harmless from any and all losses and liabilities which may occur or be occasioned by reason of the granting of such special license. And any liability of the master or owner of any such steamship to the owner or consignee of any merchandise landed from her shall not be affected by the granting of such special license or of any general order, but such liability shall continue until the merchandise is properly removed from the dock whereon the same may be landed. The collector, under such general regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall fix a uniform and reasonable rate of compensation for like service, to be paid by the master, owner, or consignee whenever such special license is granted, and shall collect and distribute the same among the inspectors assigned to superintend the unlading of the cargo."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.
